some athletes. After a short religious rite, Ariopharnes invites the assembly to honour Leander, victor in the Aphrodisian games. The champion is crowned by Hero, whose gracious words excite him to reply in song. He would fain sing of Pelides or Atrides, but is constrained to make love his theme. This closes the scene; the Priest dismisses all but Hero, with whom he remains. He questions her: Will she choose to serve the Venus celestial, or become a votary of the Venus terrestrial? She prefers to wear the "starry and sacred veil." Ariopharnes, whose designs upon the heroine now begin to appear, warns her not to provoke the revenge of disdained love. He threatens her; she defies him; he entreats her; she refuses him, and then, breathing vengeance, he storms away. Left alone, Hero soliloquises upon the position in which she finds herself, and, taking a shell from among the votive offerings, consults it as an oracle. Listening at its orifice, she hears a noise of storm and thunder, and, alarmed, casts it from her. At that moment Leander and the Priest re-enter from different directions, and converse at the back of the stage unperceived by Hero who is lost in thought. Ariopharnes affects a bantering vein, bidding Leander follow up the game of love and wishing him success, but muttering of revenge as he goes off. A love duet follows, at the close of which trumpets announce the approach of the Priest, who, however, has already entered and, concealed behind a statue of Apollo, watches the lovers. On Leander leaving, Hero invokes Apollo, asking him to reveal her fate. "Death," replies a voice. Curtain, and end of Act I.

Act II. opens in that part of the temple which is consecrated to the mysteries of Venus. A splendid picture is revealed as the curtain rises. Ariopharnes, gorgeously robed, occupies a throne, and near him are his high officers, singers, harpers, &c. Hero and Leander stand apart. Sacred hymns and dances begin the action. These ended, the Priest, bidding Hero draw near, declares the will of Venus to re-establish, in a lonely tower on the shore of Hellespont, a shrine at which once a holy virgin ministered. The mandate must be obeyed, but first it is necessary to consecrate Hero; the Priest, as he performs the rite, bidding her, in an undertone, to avoid his vengeance and accept his love. She refuses, and calls upon Leander, who attacks Ariopharnes, but is soon overpowered by numbers. The rite proceeds, and Hero takes the customary oaths, knowing that she is destined to occupy the tower. A long ensemble follows, with which the Act ends.

Act III. is laid in the Maiden's Tower, overlooking the Hellespont. Hero is discovered in her chamber watching and waiting. It is night, and a torch burns in the room. Sailors are singing without, and occasionally solo voices mingle with the meditations of the Priestess, from which we are most concerned to gather that she has wedded Leander, who nightly swims the strait to visit her. Presently she sees him coming, and dwells upon every incident of his adventure till he leaps from the window into her arms. A second extended duet follows, interrupted by a storm, alarm of which Hero is bound by her duty to give, that the Priests might come to invoke the gods. Leander bids her discharge that duty, declaring that he will re-cross the water. She, however, neglects it; the lovers cannot separate, and even when sacred trumpets are heard approaching they are still together. At length Leander leaps from the window, Hero holding the torch to light him on his way. Ariopharnes, with all his train, at that moment enters, and the torch falls to the ground. When the rite of appeasing the storm has been performed, the Priest demands of Hero why no warning was given; why the torch has dropped; why she trembles so. There is no reply, and as he fiercely approaches her, lightning strikes the tower, making a gap in the wall, through which Leander is seen dead on the rocks below. Hero falls and expires, whereupon the kneeling spectators sing the joy of the reunited lovers.

The musical architecture of the work is of a composite order. Declamation abounds, but the composer is quick to seize every opportunity for cantabile; the love duets are of the modern intense order, and truly Italian in their accumulating passion. Italian, too, is the elaborate ensemble which closes Act II., and Italian are the showy cadenzas which, in two places, recall the vocal "fireworks" of an older school. Mr. Mancinelli's harmonic method is open to a suspicion of license on its scholastic side, but has purpose and effect. There is power, moreover, in the choruses, which lack nothing of massiveness. Perhaps the only thing wanted is a little relief from continuous strain, from ardent efforts to be striking. Not all of us can bear even to look on unbroken agonising. Sympathy calls for a breathing time—some quiet in which to recover strength. Once, it is true, the composer relaxes; the ironical address of Ariopharnes to Leander at the back of the stage being accompanied by music which flows easily and gracefully along, conveying to the sense a welcome impression of natural beauty. As may be supposed, much of the effect of the work depends upon the orchestra, and just because of that it is impossible now to speak with any confidence of what the effect will be. The accompaniment given in the pianoforte score is, to use a word which Henry Chorley sometimes applied to fugues, quite "lean," and there are no indications of the orchestration. One might easily go wrong, therefore, in making an estimate of results, and I must excuse myself from any such task. What does seem quite clear is that the music of the opera expresses a good deal of energy, picturesqueness, and freedom of method, while not neglectful of past usage. I should add that while Mr. Mancinelli employs recurring themes, he does so in a very simple fashion, making them a comparatively slight ingredient in the compound of the work.

Mr. Elgar's "King Olaf."

The full and proper title of this work is "Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf," but no one will use it. "King Olaf" must the piece be called in common speech, for convenience sake, and saving of the public breath. The book is made up of an Introduction and eight Scenes, with verses taken from Longfellow, supplemented by others from the pen of Mr. H. A. Acworth, C.I.E., whose translation of Mahratta Ballads the reader may possibly have met with. Mr. Acworth, I understand, is responsible only for the lines which appear above his name, the form of the book, the selection of scenes, and the order of their presentation being entirely Mr. Elgar's. Inasmuch as the scenes chosen lie quite apart from each other in the original, it became needful to devise a connecting-link so as to bind them in some sort of unity. This has been rather ingeniously done by supposing an assembly of Scandinavian bards, at which one of their number calls for recital of certain parts of the Saga, which parts he names in succession. Mr. Elgar has a note in explanation of this procedure: "In the following scenes it is intended that the performers should be looked upon as a gathering of Skalds (bards); all, in turn, take part in the narration of the Saga, and occasionally, at the more dramatic points, personify for the moment some important character." A certain sense of unity is hereby attained, though, perhaps, not enough to remove all consciousness of the fragmentary.

Introduction.—This contains a short chorus, describing the Saga in Longfellow's words, and a recitative summoning Thor, the god of thunder.

Scene I.—The Challenge of Thor.—The Pagan god boasts of himself and his power, and challenges the Galilean Christ to a trial of strength.

Scene II.—King Olaf's Return.—King Olaf hears the defiance, and, sailing North to Drontheim, answers it with acceptance, as becomes a Christian monarch. He has been baptised while an exile, and now returns to claim his inheritance and vindicate his faith.

Scene III.—The Conversion.—King Olaf and his men are at the shrine of Thor, when the men of Drontheim, headed by their chief, Ironbeard, come armed to conference. The King asks if they will accept the cross and be baptised. Ironbeard answers "No." Then, says Olaf, if Thor and Odin be high gods, we must sacrifice our best on their altars—Ironbeard, for instance, and his daughter, Gudrun. Not so, returns the chief, take the best of thy axe-men. On this the King lifts his weapon and strikes the image from its place. Ironbeard springs forward, and he, too, is felled to the earth. These arguments are convincing. The Drontheimers promptly change their faith.

Scene IV.—Gudrun.—Olaf marries Gudrun as atonement for the slaying, and the bridal night is marked by a disquieting event. The bride, seeking revenge, rises from her couch, seizes a dagger and approaches the sleeping King, who opportunely awakes. He asks what glistens in her hand, and is told it is the bodkin which fastens her hair. Olaf is not deceived, and, in the morning, the pair go their several ways.

Scene V.—The Wraith of Odin.—Olaf keeps high feast, when the door opens and a one-eyed stranger enters, wrapped in cloak and hood. He is welcomed, placed next the King, and, Wotan-like, begins to tell stories, helping thus to pass the time away. In the morning he is nowhere to be seen, yet the doors are found locked. Olaf declares that he has entertained the wraith of Odin, and that the triumph of his faith is now assured.

Scene VI.—Sigrid.—Olaf makes an offer of marriage to Queen Sigrid, at the same time inviting her to become a Christian. She will accept him, but not his creed. Olaf reasons with her, but his arguments are of no avail. On this he waxes unmannerly, declares he will never marry a "heathen dame," and dashes his glove on the floor so clumsily that it strikes the Queen's cheek. He storms away; Sigrid simply remarking that she can wait to be, as she resolves to be, Olaf's death.

Scene VII.—Thyri.—The sister of King Svend, of Denmark, flying from her husband, seeks refuge at Olaf's court. He falls in love with her, takes her for his own, and, at her entreaty, proposes to recover the lands which were her dower. Meanwhile Sigrid has wedded King Svend, an event which has consequences in the final scene.

Scene VIII.—The Death of Olaf.—Instigated by his wife, Svend makes war upon Olaf, who falls in a great sea battle.

Epilogue.—Here we are taught that the true faith has mightier weapons than sword and spear:—

> Stronger than steel
> Is the sword of the Spirit;
> Swifter than arrows
> The light of the truth is,
> Greater than anger
> Is love, and subdueth.

Such, in outline, is the interesting book which Mr. Elgar and his colleague have prepared.

Space does not permit a detailed examination of the music, nor is the process needful, since the work will be performed in a few days. Enough that, as far as meets the eye in the pianoforte score, the composer appears to much greater advantage than in the "Light of Life." He writes with a freer hand, with greater confidence and boldness. He excels in the picturesque and dramatic; his vocal music rises to its proper standard of importance, and the general result is satisfactory. With this indication of what may be expected the reader must wait the event, and, if he will, prepare himself to witness the birth of a work of skill and power.

CONCERNING CHURCH MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(By our American Correspondent.)

III.

The names of the dioceses of the United States generally furnish a clue to their geographical position, and anyone who will take the trouble to look up on a map the nineteen which have been referred to, will find that in each of them is one or more important cities, and in these cities or their immediate environs are to be found about all the positions which are tempting. Country appointments, as a rule, pay very poorly indeed, or do not pay at all. The reason is obvious. The American churches depend solely upon the direct contributions of their parishioners, and the smaller the place and the fewer the communicants the feebler the church and the more scanty the expenditure. Even the largest and wealthiest of the dioceses contain a surprising number of small churches whose very existence is a struggle with poverty. For example, New York—the "banner" diocese of the country, remember—contains forty-nine churches which have less than fifty communicants each, and twenty-four more which have between fifty and one hundred each. And it is worth while noting just here that these figures usually over-state the number of communicants, because when a person's name has once been entered on the parochial records as a communicant it is very often carried along and returned in the statistics year after year, even though the individual may have ceased all active connection with the church or may have actually left the parish, so unsatisfactory is the method of keeping records in many places. Now, New York presents the best extreme; to get the other, one would have to turn to some of the Western missionary jurisdictions; but without doing that, let us look for a moment at a diocese which may fairly be said to stand somewhere about midway between the two—one which has no large city within its limits. Take the diocese of North Carolina. Here are seventy-nine churches; fifty-three have less than fifty communicants each, nine have between fifty and one hundred, seven between one hundred and one hundred-and-fifty, and one has over two hundred. The remainder make no report of numbers. What sort of a field is that diocese for a professional organist?

Enough has been said to show that the American places worth having cluster about the larger cities, and of course the effect of this is to make organists stick closely about these centres. Thus it happens that whenever a good appointment is open anywhere there is a lively swarm of applicants right at hand, and the chances of a man who is so unfortunate as to be "side tracked" by force of circumstances into some small town become poor indeed. And just here an important factor comes into play. This is the long American distances. The larger cities and more important towns of the United States, after one leaves the Atlantic seaboard, are so far apart that they live, move, and have their being very much in themselves. Each one is apt to have special commercial and other interests of its own which intensify the local spirit. Consequently there is not much acquaintance between the organists of different cities, and not much is known in one city of what is going on in Church music in another, unless one makes a business, at considerable trouble, of keeping himself informed. When it comes to the smaller towns, which are "off the track," this becomes worse. And it is the easiest thing in the world for a man to accept a post as a stepping-stone to something better, only to find himself so isolated that it is next to impossible for him to be heard of outside his own little environment. An organist thus situated has often—perhaps generally—no prospect before him but to shift from town to town, in the hope that eventually he may land in, or near to, some one of the larger cities. A church in one of these provincial towns, when it needs an organist, usually has to go outside its own limits and take one on recommendation. A church in one of the larger cities can make a choice of candidates from men right at hand, whose work can be heard and judged. It is out of the question for candidates to travel hundreds of miles to be heard, or for church authorities to go long distances to hear them; and as testimonials and degrees count for but little with the big city churches of the United States, the very circumstances combine to exclude the man in the second-rate town, no matter what his ability may be. I have known of a number of instances of this kind where men of undoubted talent and ability have been stranded in out of the way posts which they had accepted as means, only to find them most disappointing ends. Of course, there are a few churches which have a national reputation, but the number is very small—less than that of the cathedrals of England, I think. A reputation built up in one of these churches would be very likely to win for an organist a vacancy of equal grade in another large city. But such places are as difficult to obtain as the highest class of English appointments. The competition is as keen, but it is a competition of a totally different kind—one in which the winner is the man who, other things being equal, or sometimes other things being unequal, can get the inside track with the powers that be.

In another respect these magnificent American distances operate to the disadvantage of organists, and that is the cost of moving from place to place. Only a single man, who can pack his belongings in a trunk, can afford to move often. I saw the other day an appointment in a Los Angeles, California, church advertised in a New York newspaper. The stipend was $600. Suppose a married man, with a family of, say, four persons all told, should accept that post. How much would be left of his first year's salary by the time he had transported his family and a reasonable amount of household goods from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast? The last time I moved I paid £10 to move ten miles, and I do not believe I could move again to any point which would involve the shipment of my goods by rail and double handling at both ends of the journey for less than £20; and lest it should appear that I must have a large share of worldly possessions, I may say that my belongings are just sufficient to furnish comfortably an eight-room cottage of very modest size. Single men have a very large advantage over their married brethren in this respect, if in no other.

At this point I beg to remind the reader that what I have written has been intended for professional organists: men who have adopted Church music as their life-work and their principal, if not sole means of livelihood; who have spent years of study and considerable sums of money in preparation, and who therefore feel entitled to a proper and reasonable return on their outlay. Such men may, I think, fairly draw the following deductions concerning financial prospects in America. The country is no longer "virgin soil" for organists. Of the best class of appointments there are probably not more than are to be found in the cathedrals and important parish churches in England. There are doubtless fewer fully qualified men on the ground, but there are enough to make competition fierce for any posts except those in which a man must content himself with a bare living, little or no reputation, and a life spent among narrow provincial surroundings. As to just what the average salary of an organist is in the United States I do not know. Since I began to write this paper I have seen a newspaper article, based on statements made in some English periodical, to the effect that the average salary in England is about 250 dollars per annum. If this was obtained by adding together all the salaries and dividing by the total number of men engaged in the profession, I think it would be perfectly safe to venture the assertion that an average struck in the same way here would show an even smaller amount; for the very large number of people who are not professionals, who are serving in the small towns and villages for small salaries, or none at all, would bring down the average to a very low figure. That the opportunities for obtaining employment among the churches of lesser importance are more frequent than they are in England I have no doubt. This is due to causes which I shall consider later, when it will appear that the advantages are not unmixed with drawbacks.

Leaving now the question of money, I turn to certain characteristics of American Church music, which are peculiar to the country, to the people, and to the inherent constitution of the Episcopal Church, and which, at least to my thinking, present formidable obstacles to the success of many men trained in the English School.

In the first place, for all practical purposes, the American Episcopal Church is a congregational body. Each church, by the action of its elected vestry, calls its own rector. True, a rector's tenure is theoretically for life; he cannot be dismissed by the congregation. He cannot be removed by the bishop unless upon duly formulated charges affecting his moral character, when he may, of course, be deposed from the ministry altogether. But unless the church be an endowed one (and the number of these is so small as to be counted almost on one's fingers), or the rector be a man of private means, he is absolutely in the power of the congregation, who can, by cutting off his salary, force him to resign by what is commonly termed the "starving out" plan. Of course, the law gives the rector the right to sue for arrears of salary and collect a judgment from the property of the corporation; but as a very large majority of the church properties are encumbered by mortgage, and litigation is slow and expensive, this remedy becomes rather a barren one in the hands of a clergyman already impoverished by the stoppage of his salary. This state of things is much resented by the clergy, and all sorts of plans are proposed to give them greater independence from congregational dictation; but it is altogether unlikely that the laity will voluntarily surrender their powers, or that any material change from the vestry system as it now exists will take place for very many years, if ever. Meantime this condition of affairs is the constant and fruitful source of quarrels between rectors and parishes, and the "starving out" process is in operation all the time. This absolute dependence of the American churches upon the direct contributions of their parishioners is felt quite as much in the large city churches as in the smaller and rural ones, if not more. There is hardly a large city in the country where churches in greater or less number have not either died outright or, after a languishing period, been revived and set going once more only by removal to some new site where worshippers could be had; and all this because of movements in population or turns in the real estate market, which left the sacred buildings practically tenantless. These changes in American cities take place with incredible rapidity; and it is no uncommon thing for a church to start, flourish for a time like a green bay tree (perhaps under the lead of some more than usually popular clergyman), droop and drag along for a while, and then either flicker out entirely or sell its property, pack up its movables, and travel off after the last of its departing parishioners, or in search of a new lease of life in some other quarter of the city—all within a score of years. I believe I could name off-hand twenty New York churches of various denominations which were powerful, wealthy, influential, and crowded when I was a boy, which are now either dead and gone or are struggling along—sometimes with the aid of other stronger corporations—as mission parishes working among the poor who have moved in and taken possession of the once aristocratic neighbourhoods, or have been swallowed up in "consolidations" with other parishes, or have moved "up town" and started in fresh pastures. And I am still on the right side of forty years. I think I could name a dozen New York churches which are to-day on the very verge of extinction, because they were planted where they stand in anticipation of some neighbourhood development which never materialised, so fickle and treacherous are these movements in population. This is not peculiar to New York. Any other large city tells the same story; but perhaps the development of New York has been more rapid in the last twenty years than any other city—saving, possibly, Chicago.

Now, if this dependence of a church on its congregation—for its very life, as one may say—causes uncertainty in its affairs, and makes trouble for the clergy, it makes infinitely more trouble for the organist. For the organist stands in a very anomalous position. The canons provide that the minister shall "give order concerning the tunes to be sung," but they do not authorise him to employ the organist. The organist, ordinarily, is the direct employé of the vestry—i.e., of the congregation, but subject to the orders of the rector, and bound to obey those orders in case of any difference between the rector and the congregation concerning the character of the music or the ritual. He may thus find himself between Scylla and Charybdis, offered the choice of being dashed to pieces on the rock of rectorial disapproval or drowned in the whirlpool of congregational dissatisfaction. It is to be said that such cases do not frequently occur, for most rectors desire to keep the peace with their people, and if one sort of music will please the people and keep the pews full they are not likely to stand very stiffly for another sort, even though it be more in accordance with the best standards of taste. The one criterion is the pleasing of the congregation, and from this it follows that the widest diversity exists between churches standing almost side by side. This even extends to the service itself. So common has the practice become of altering the words of the service themselves, by omitting this, lengthening that, or interpolating the other, in the restless search for what the people like, that only very recently some of the bishops were moved to address a solemn admonition to their clergy against juggling with the services. So, looking the American churches over, you shall find all manner of strange devices resorted to with the purpose, or at any rate the hope, of making them more "attractive." For if a church would live in America it must attract. Nothing is so successful as success. Let the crowd once take to going to a particular church, and standing-room will be hard to get. Let the attendance fall off, and the church become known as being poorly filled, and the crowd will shun it as though it were pest-ridden.

Let me give an illustration or two of the way in which this works on Church music. I went not long ago into a prominent church in a very large American city for evening service. As the Processional Hymn began (an American boy choir always sings a Processional) two processions made their appearance from doors in opposite transepts. One contained about fourteen treble boys, two good alto boys, two tenors, and two basses. The men were capable. The other procession contained at least twenty-five girls and young women, vested in cottas put on right over their dresses—blue, pink, green, yellow, and all—and small "mortar-board" black caps. These girls shouted furiously on the melody, and the effect of the forty trebles against two altos, two tenors, and two basses may be imagined. They came down the two side aisles of the church and met at the west door, when the boys and men halted and allowed the feminine contingent to precede them up the centre aisle; when the chancel was reached the girls and women filed right and left into seats arranged for them at the foot of the chancel steps, and the boys and men passed on into the stalls. The service was partly choral, the Responses after the Versicles being sung to little tunelets, composed, as I was afterwards told, by the organist, because the Tallis Festival Responses were not pretty, and the people did not like them. The Psalms were read, the Gloria Patri after each being sung to a Gregorian tone. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Anglican chants. During the offering a woman, posted somewhere about the organ, out of my sight, sang a Moody and Sankey hymn as a solo. There was no sermon. I was told that this church had a totally different sort of service in the morning, when the congregation was made up of a different class of people. At the morning services, so my informant said, only good services and anthems of the modern English school were sung by the men and boys alone. Judging from my hearing, under unfavourable conditions, I should think the "boy choir" proper to have been well balanced and well trained, and capable of singing a good service properly. The organist assured me that he was in no way responsible for the evening service; but that its peculiar features resulted from the attempt to please the people. How far the attempt may be successful I know not. The church was but poorly filled on my visit. This was not a country church, in the backwoods, remember; but one which owned a costly building and thought a great deal of itself.

Take another case. The rector of one of the best known churches of the middle West told me once, with manifest pride, that he had a choir of 100 voices (boys, women, and men) in a church which 800 people would crowd uncomfortably. I remarked that the noise must be dreadful, but he did not seem to like it. He drew out a programme showing that his choir had performed "The Messiah," and that the bass solos and recitatives had been divided around among five different people. I ventured to say that he must be very rich in basses, since there were probably not five resident in the city of New York who could sing "The Messiah" properly. But somehow he did not seem to like that either. He was hard to please. But he was pleasing his people, who, no doubt, thought that the efforts of their five fellow parishioners in the choir were all that they ought to be.

These things go to show how constant and prominent is the element of congregational interference. It manifests itself in every possible way, from the keen and discriminating criticism of the more cultured congregations of the important city churches, to the crude "we like it" or "we don't like it" of the smaller and less educated ones. There is no model, as there is in England; no standard, established by long usage, and by the cumulative result of the best musical taste and the ripest judgment of ecclesiastical propriety continued through generations; no idea of Church music as an abstract offering of worship to God. You shall be told in plain terms by the clergy that the music must have "dramatic effect," that it must be "devotional," and so on through a whole vocabulary of terms, which in the end come down to the point that the music is expected to make somebody feel somehow. Or you may be told with still more frankness by some vestryman that the function of Church music is to bring people into the church who will contribute to it. Remember that I am now speaking broadly. There are exceptions to every rule, and there are American churches where services are sung every Sunday, unexceptionable in point of selection and in manner of rendering. But for one such you will find fifty which are a law unto themselves, and where the canons of good taste are thrown to the winds when it becomes a question of pleasing the people.

Now I cannot but think that American organists, who have been brought up to this state of things and know no other way, are more successful in meeting this shifting popular taste than men who have been strictly trained in the best traditions of English Church music, especially men who have reached middle life and have become fixed in their tastes and habits before they came here. Does it not seem reasonable that a man after fifteen or twenty years of English experience should feel irritated, galled, and hampered by the constant necessity of modelling the service of Almighty God to suit the taste of some vestryman's wife or musical daughter? And yet that is what has to be done, more or less, almost everywhere. The "boy choir" movement, which has swept the country like a wave the last fifteen years, was hailed as a deliverance from many evils—something that would at least establish a uniform and correct standard in Church music. It has failed. It cannot be denied that it brought with it a knowledge and, to some limited extent, an appreciation of English Church music. But the novelty has worn off, and a decided movement has now begun toward abolishing boys altogether, or using them only for appearance's sake, while the real work is done by vested women. I am inclined to think that the English Cathedral service is not adapted to American conditions as they exist in this year of grace. At all events, as long as the present congregationalism obtains, so long will congregations insist upon having what pleases them, and so long must organists be, in a certain way, entertainers. America is not England. The countries are different, the people are different, the traditions are different, the churches are different, the standard of merit is different. In England the aim of professional education is ultimate perfection; in America the aim is present availability; hence the success of many American organists where Englishmen, far their superiors in attainment, fail. I cannot possibly pursue this branch of the subject in the limited space of a magazine article. A volume might be written upon it. Time alone will bring about a revolution in the musical taste of American congregations. In the larger (and consequently older) cities churches are to be found which appreciate what is really good, but right alongside of them flourish others where, in spite of boy choirs, much is done that is thoroughly meretricious.

It is this congregational element which creates most of the opportunities which exist in the United States for organists to obtain employment. Churches are constantly changing their men. They soon tire of one man, and often without just cause for fault-finding they dismiss their organists because "the congregation desire a change." As I have said, the annual stirring up of the pool takes place on February 1 and goes on until May 1. The English organist who comes here at the proper time, and has someone to keep him posted, and is capable, is very likely to obtain a position of the second or third rate without any very great difficulty, and with the knowledge that next year he is as likely as not to find himself repeating the operation through no fault of his own. Whether he ever gets into a place of the first magnitude depends not so much upon his ability as upon his readiness and skill in adapting himself to the conditions of American Church life which I have tried to outline.

The official life of the American organist in any one church is as grass. In the morning he is green and groweth up, but in the evening he is cut down, dried up, and withered. I have been in my post eight years, and when I tell people that fact they look at me with a sort of reverential aspect, very much as I suppose I should look at Dr. Hopkins, or Dr. Longhurst, of Canterbury. When an organist has served twenty-five years in one church we get up a great festival to commemorate the event, and give him a silver cup, which he may use to drink from in his approaching second childhood!

Truly, Church music in America is yet in a very squally and unruly infancy, even though an American, who loves his country as well as a man can, and would on no account leave it for another, is compelled to say so.

REVIEWS.

Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series. Edited by Sir John Stainer and Dr. C. Hubert H. Parry. Sonata Form. By W. H. Hadow. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This is one of the more recently issued volumes of Messrs. Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, the importance of which it would be difficult to over-estimate. The present number of the series is from the pen of a musician who has given for many years his special attention to this particular subject. The importance to the musical student of the subject of "form," even in its broad acceptation, will be at once admitted, for where there is no form of any kind, art is not. A thorough knowledge of Harmony, even the mastery of Counterpoint with all its purifying influence, will be in a great degree neutralised if the student has neglected the study of "form"—the mode of building up his structure in an orderly and intelligent manner. The book before us opens with a capital chapter on the Elements of form, next its history and development are treated of, a lucid explanation is given of the circumstances which caused the lines of sacred and secular music early to diverge—how ecclesiastical music was bent upon maintaining the ancien régime; how, on the other hand, secular music, unfettered by the restrictions imposed by the Church, and turning off into fields and tracts unknown, was destined to become a brilliant guiding-star, the harbinger of a complete revolution. It would be pleasant to follow Mr. Hadow farther along the historical line did space permit us to do so. The next chapters treat respectively of Binary and Ternary forms. Here it may be said that in regard to the actual evolution of the Sonata there will probably be some who disagree with Mr. Hadow; he is, however, a man of such experience that whatever he says should be listened to with respect, nor would it be safe lightly to contradict him. The various blocks of work, "Exposition," "Free Fantasia," and "Recapitulation" are excellently treated, a large number of the examples being taken from Beethoven's Sonatas, which is a great advantage, as students have them ready at hand for reference. Even his account of the "Introduction" to a First Movement—which in many books is little more than touched upon—has here received very careful consideration. After pointing out its obvious utility, that of preparing the mind for the key of the First Movement proper, he says: "Another higher and far more important use of this Preface, as it were, is to foreshadow in miniature the more salient points of key-system embodied in the First Movement." A happy instance is given from Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, where it is apparent that the keys of A, C natural, and F natural are those centres in which important material is to be subsequently planted; and turning to the First Movement itself (which is in the key of A) its development or Free Fantasia portion is found to be working largely in the fields of C natural and F natural, the same centres being chosen also for important work in the Finale. In the explanations of the First and Second Subjects and their possible appendages, we do not quite agree with the classification of our author. Mr. Hadow would include under the term "Subject" the pieces of Codetta or connecting work which, for obvious reasons, are frequently found tacked on to the Theme after it has run its own course; but it is a known fact that when we arrive at the Recapitulatory section, these appendages are generally thrown off, because at this point the idea of concentration is so much in the ascendancy, that short, fragmentary work becomes absolutely de trop. We would therefore prefer the retention of such terms as "Codetta," and would draw a line of demarcation for the use of students at the actual end of the subjects proper. Coming to the Episodes, which are explained in the most thorough and exhaustive manner, we can only say that the student will here find all the information he may require, everything being most clearly mapped out, lucidly explained, and supported at each stage by well-selected illustrations. Farther on a chapter is devoted to the discussion of those important "extraneous influences" which, in no slight degree, have affected the Sonata in its growth upwards. The ancient and modern forms of the Rondo are fully explained in Chapter ix., and the book ends with the treatment of the "Concerto." Musicians may possibly have formed their own opinions on the subject of the historic growth of the Sonata; be that as it may, they will find in this book a mine of useful matter, the result of long and careful research. There is a slip on page 59, where the paragraph number should obviously be § 65 and not § 64.

Hey! Jolly Robin Hood. Song. Words by Robert Jones. Music by Mary Carmichael.

Me Darlin'. Song. Words by G. Hubi Newcombe. Music by Gerard F. Cobb. [Weekes and Co.]

The words of the first of these songs are from the "Musical Dream," which dates from the early part of the seventeenth century, and in setting them the composer has happily caught their bold and manly character. The ballad form has appropriately been adopted, and the harmonies and style of the accompaniment are well in keeping with the design of the composition. Bass vocalists who are in search of a spirited song may be warmly recommended to examine this example, which is admirably laid out for their voices.

Miss Carmichael's work in "Tell me, ye brooks," would seem to have been confined to the filling in of the accompaniment to meet the requirements of modern taste. The ditty is suitable to well-trained soprano vocalists, by whom it could be made very effective owing to its graceful melodiousness and certain naïve charm.

The pleading and pathetic character of the text of "Me Darlin'" has been excellently caught by Mr. Cobb, and the song is one of those simple and sympathetic utterances which appeal strongly to the feelings common to humanity. It is published in two keys, but the character of the music is made more effective in the lower, that of D. The vocal compass is an octave from the key-note.

A Full Morning, Communion, and Evening Service in C. For Men's voices. By Gerard F. Cobb. (Op. 28.) [Charles Woolhouse.]

According to the title-page this service was composed by request for the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, where, as in many cathedral and collegiate establishments, the music is rendered by men alone at certain seasons of the year. Mr. Cobb is an earnest and able musician, and, being also a scholar in other departments of culture, he deals correctly with words and phrases in the Liturgy frequently mis-accentuated, such as "Sabaoth," "Being of one substance," &c. The service is written in a chaste and church-like style, and is mainly in three parts for the voices, though the composer does not hesitate to sub-divide them when the words suggest such amplification.

The Captive Soul. Cantata for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, and Tenor Soli and Chorus of Female Voices. Words by Ethel C. Pedley. Music by E. M. Woolley. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The story tells of a fay who, desiring mortal life—for, alas, even fairies do not seem contented with their lot—captures a human soul and becomes a fair maiden. But misfortune falls on those with whom she comes in contact; she is denounced as a witch and burned—and thus the soul is released. Miss Pedley's story is quaint, and her poem contains some pleasing lines. Miss Woolley has written music of picturesque character. She also displays a certain power of characterisation: the light music assigned to the fairy contrasts well with the sorrowful strains of the Captive Soul. The choral numbers are attractive, and the pianoforte accompaniment adds not a little to the charm of the music.

Action Songs. Books III. and IV. Words by May Gillington. Music by Annie E. Armstrong.

The Fair Maids of February. Short Cantata for Female voices. Libretto by May Gillington. Music by Richard H. Walthew.

[Robert Cocks and Co.]

The merit of this series of action songs is fully maintained in the third and fourth books. The little stories are brightly told in rhythmic verse, and the directions for the illustrative gestures are clear and simple. No less commendable are the musical settings. These are melodious and well accentuated, and their musical interest is increased by their effective harmonic treatment. These songs will not only content little folks, but are calculated to cultivate perception, rhythm, and appropriateness of movement.

The libretto of the cantata is based upon a dainty story of poetical character, the "Fair Maids of February" being the common name in the South of England for snowdrops. These are offered by a fairy the choice of love or perpetual beauty, the former being declined and the latter accepted. Mr. Walthew's music is well suited to the subject and effectively laid out for the voices. It comprises two contralto solos, a trio, and three choruses, all of which contain proofs of the talent and taste of the composer.

Old English Suite. For Pianoforte Solo. By William Creser. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This is a pianoforte arrangement by the composer of an Orchestral Suite which was produced at a concert by the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, at the Queen's Hall, on May 13 last. It consists of three movements, the thematic material of which has been derived from old English popular songs. The first number contains "Goe from my window, my love, my love," which serves for an introduction; "Good morning, pretty maid," a traditional Gloucestershire melody; and "Cupid, the pretty ploughboy," the two last-named forming the first and second subjects of the movement. In the second number use has been made of "A jug of this," a song taken down by the late Dr. W. A. Barrett from the lips of a Wiltshire farm labourer; and "Phillida flouts me," also found in Barrett's collection of old English ditties. Three dances are utilised in the concluding movement of this Suite. A country dance, dating from about 1300, from a MS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford; "Sir Eglamore," from the "Merry Drollery" of the period of Charles II.; and "Parthenia," a tune found in tablature notation in John Playford's "Introduction to the skill of Music," printed in 1665. No attempt has been made to subject this material to elaborate development; and the pianoforte version has been simplified to bring the music well within the abilities of the average pianist. The Suite, however, is scholarly, extremely bright, and the character of the old ditties is well preserved. It is "merry music" of the best kind, and, played with spirit, will never fail to give pleasure to its listeners.

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 244-246. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The recent additions to this valuable library for organists comprise, in No. 244, an Elegy, by E. Silas, based upon themes from the anthems "My beloved spake" and "I was glad," by Henry Purcell (and played at the Purcell Festival last year). These have been cleverly adapted to the genius of the organ, and the result is a highly impressive and effective piece, eminently suitable for church use. It will present no difficulties to the average organist. No. 245 consists of an Andante Larghetto and Allegro, by J. Varley Roberts. The first-named is one of those quiet and graceful pieces which are very useful to the church organist. The Larghetto and Allegro are also easy to play, and will, doubtless, be welcome. No. 246 is a Postlude in G, by Charles Steggall. This is a somewhat extended movement, based upon a theme of considerable vigour, and is treated in a way familiar to those who are acquainted with this composer's works. The contrapuntal writing is effective and flowing, and the more rapid pedal passages are conveniently arranged for the feet. A clever organist will also find many opportunities for the legitimate display of the resources of his instrument.

Hast thou not heard. Anthem for festal or general use. Composed by H. Ralph Jackson.

The Man of Sorrows. The passages of Scripture arranged by Edith A. Mason. Music by Edward Mason.

[Weekes and Co.]

There is much merit of a popular kind in Mr. Jackson's anthem, the part-writing being ingeniously devised to secure the greatest effect with the least demand upon the abilities of the executants. There are several solo passages for the voices, which are well supported by the organ accompaniment.

"The Man of Sorrows" is a devotional Service for use on Good Friday, and consists of an arrangement of some well-known hymns and music to be sung by the choir, together with appropriate Scriptural passages, which presumably are to be read by the Priest.

The Coming of the King. A sacred Cantata for Female voices. Words by Helen Marion Burnside. Music by Myles B. Foster. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This work is dedicated "to the ladies of the Lake Erie Seminary, Cleveland, U.S.A.," and is admirably suited to the requirements of all such like establishments during the forthcoming Advent season. The argument supposes the presence of three angels—Hope, Peace, and Goodwill—with their sister spirits, who are waiting for the rising of the Star which shall betoken the birth of Christ, and the joyful anticipations of these heavenly beings form a bright and pleasing poem. After a brief instrumental introduction, the chorus sings an exceedingly melodious and rhythmic number, written in three parts and containing some effective imitative passages. This is followed by a soprano solo for Hope, which will present no difficulties to an average singer. The next six pages are occupied by a duet for second soprano (Peace) and contralto (Goodwill). This is an excellent number, and will prove attractive to all vocalists possessing refined musical taste. The concluding chorus also contains another soprano solo and an effective passage for contraltos in unison. These and some clever harmonic changes go to make up a spirited and impressive Finale.

Requiem. By Charles Gounod. English words adapted by Joseph Bennett. Pianoforte accompaniment by Henri Büsser. [Metzler and Co.]

This is the last important work of the celebrated French musician, who is stated on the title-page to have died while playing a portion of it at St. Cloud, on October 15, 1893. It consists of six numbers: Introit or Kyrie, Dies Iræ, Sanctus, Benedictus, Pie Jesu, and Agnus Dei. The opening phrase is a portion of the chromatic scale comprising seven semitones, and this passage may be said to indicate the method pursued in the work, the climaxes being in nearly every case attained by a repetition of phrases at the distance of a tone or semitone. As the work progresses this leads to a certain sense of monotony, which is increased by the feeble nature of the thematic material. Indeed, the music is heavy without being impressive. The work contains solo parts for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass, with chorus, which occasionally is written in six parts. The part-writing is harmonic rather than contrapuntal, and effects are striven for by massive chords which frequently are but distantly related. Two settings of the Benedictus are included, the second omitting the chorus parts appended to the first, and thus being converted into a duet for soprano and tenor.

Bordogni's Twenty-Four Vocal Exercises for Mezzo-Soprano. Edited by Alberto Randegger.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Marco Bordogni, who died at Paris in 1856, was for many years one of the most distinguished professors of singing at the Paris Conservatoire, and these exercises were doubtless intended to form part of his projected Vocal Instructor, the completion of which was arrested by his death. They are admirably designed to give that command of vocal inflection which distinguished the accomplished singer, and their value is distinctly increased by the addition of breath marks and careful editing, which they have received from so experienced a teacher of the art as Mr. Randegger.

Sonata in G minor. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Dorothea Hollins. [Vienna: Ludwig Doblinger.]

There is much merit in this Sonata, and of a kind which will recommend itself to musicians as well as to those possessing less intimate acquaintance with the art. It is in the usual four movements, which, by their directness of expression and rhythmic accentuation, are essentially English in character. The chief subject of the opening movement partakes of the nature of an English country dance, which is tantamount to saying that it possesses considerable vivacity. The second movement opens with a suave melody, and its effectiveness is heightened by an episode of a declamatory kind. The Scherzo is bright and gay, and the Finale possesses considerable vigour. As a whole the composition shows well-trained talent, and is worthy of the attention of performers.

Pièces Characteristiques. For Violin and Pianoforte. By J. A. de Orellana. [Schott and Co.]

These pieces consist of a Berceuse, Serenade, and Gavotte. They are melodious, easy to play, and decidedly pleasing. Much taste and fancy is shown in the pianoforte part.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical season may be said to have begun here with the advent of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, which opened a week's engagement in our New Grand Opera House, on the 14th ult. A Wagnerian wave may be said to have passed over us, seeing that out of seven performances four have been devoted to the works of the prophet of Bayreuth, and, to the credit of the city be it added, were all well attended. The opening performance was "Tannhäuser," with Mr. E. C. Hedmondt in the title-rôle, Miss Rita Elandi as Elizabeth, Mr. Alec Marsh as Wolfram, and the minor characters filled with that regard for ensemble which marks the performances of this Company. Mr. Richard Eckhold conducted. On Tuesday "Carmen" was put on, with Mdlle. Zelie de Lussan in the title-rôle, Mr. Philip Brozel as José, and Mr. Alec Marsh as Escamillo. On Wednesday night we had for the first time in English here Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" with a strong cast, including Mr. E. C. Hedmondt, Mr. Ludwig, Mr. Tilbury, Mr. William Paull, Mr. Homer Lind, and Mr. Frank Wood, with Miss Alice Esty and Miss Kirkby Lunn among the ladies. Thursday evening saw a fine performance of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," with Mr. Ludwig in his great conception of the weird hero. "Tannhäuser" was repeated at the Matinée on Friday, with Mr. Philip Brozel in the title-rôle, and Mr. William Paull as Wolfram, the rest of the cast as at its first performance. The house was crowded. The evening performance was Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon." On Saturday night the apparently inseparable "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" brought the series of performances to a close.

For the forthcoming season I understand extensive engagements have been made by the Philharmonic Society, and it is whispered that the season's Concerts will include Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Berlioz's "Faust." Mr. Louis Mantell has also made arrangements to give some twenty popular Concerts in connection with his Saturday night series.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

All arrangements for our approaching musical season are now completed, and it promises to be of unusual interest. The Birmingham Festival Choral Society, which is entering upon its thirty-seventh concert season, has issued a most attractive scheme for its forthcoming four Subscription Concerts. Much interest is attached to the Jubilee performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," which will take place in the Town Hall, on the 8th inst., with Madame Marie Duma, Madame Belle Cole, Messrs. Iver McKay and Ffrangcon-Davies as principals. The Committee are making strenuous efforts to secure the help and attendance of any survivors who took part in the original performance in the Town Hall, August 26, 1846. At the second Concert, on November 19, Dr. Heap's cantata "The Maid of Astolat" will be given; at the third Concert, Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens"; and at the fourth and last Concert, a Handelian selection from "Israel in Egypt," "Acis and Galatea," and "Solomon." The list of principals for the series will also include Madame Ella Russell, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Medora Henson, Madame Marie Hooton, Miss Ada Crossley; Messrs. Henry Piercy, Edwin T. Morgan, Edward Branscombe, Davies Hughes, David Bispham, and Watkin Mills.

Messrs. Harrison's four Subscription Concerts, the first of which will take place in the Town Hall, on the 5th inst., embrace a long array of famed artists, the list being headed by Madame Nordica. For the first time Señor Sarasate will appear at one of the Subscription Concerts.

Mr. Stockley enters upon his twenty-third season of Orchestral Concerts, and will produce during the season several important works not heard here previously, the most noteworthy of which are Dvorák's new Symphony, "From the New World," Saint-Saëns's new Symphony, and Scharwenka's "Andante Religioso." The principal vocalists and instrumentalists at these Concerts include Madame Amy Sherwin, Madame Clara Samuell, Madame Duma, and Mr. Andrew Black; Mr. John Dunn and Mr. Max Mossel (violinists), Mr. Ivan Mossel (violoncellist), Madame Ivan Mossel, Mr. Leonard Borwick, and Dr. Winn (pianists). Four interesting Drawing-room Concerts will also be given during the season by Mr. Max Mossel, the talented Dutch violinist. Engagements for these have been made with M. Eugene Ysaye, the eminent Belgian violinist; M. de Greef, the pianist; Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg, Madame Ivan Mossel, and Mr. Ivan Mossel. In the vocal department we are promised the co-operation of Mrs. Henschel, Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Hamcutt, Mdlle. Pauline Manifurgus, and Mr. George Henschel.

The Midland Musical Society, under Mr. Stevenson's conductorship, have decided to produce this season the "Elijah," "Samson," "St. Paul," and the "Redemption."

The band of Her Majesty's 1st Life Guards, under Mr. Joel Engelfield, gave two Concerts at the Moseley Botanical Gardens on the 10th ult. The programme included the ever-popular three Dances from "Henry VIII.," selections from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète," the "Artist's Model," the "Mikado," and a Wagner selection.

An extraordinary success was achieved at the Prince of Wales's Theatre with the "Geisha." An excellent all-round company was responsible for its production, the cast including Miss Geraldine Ulmar, Miss Marie Studholme, Mr. Bertie Wright, and Mr. Rutland Barrington.

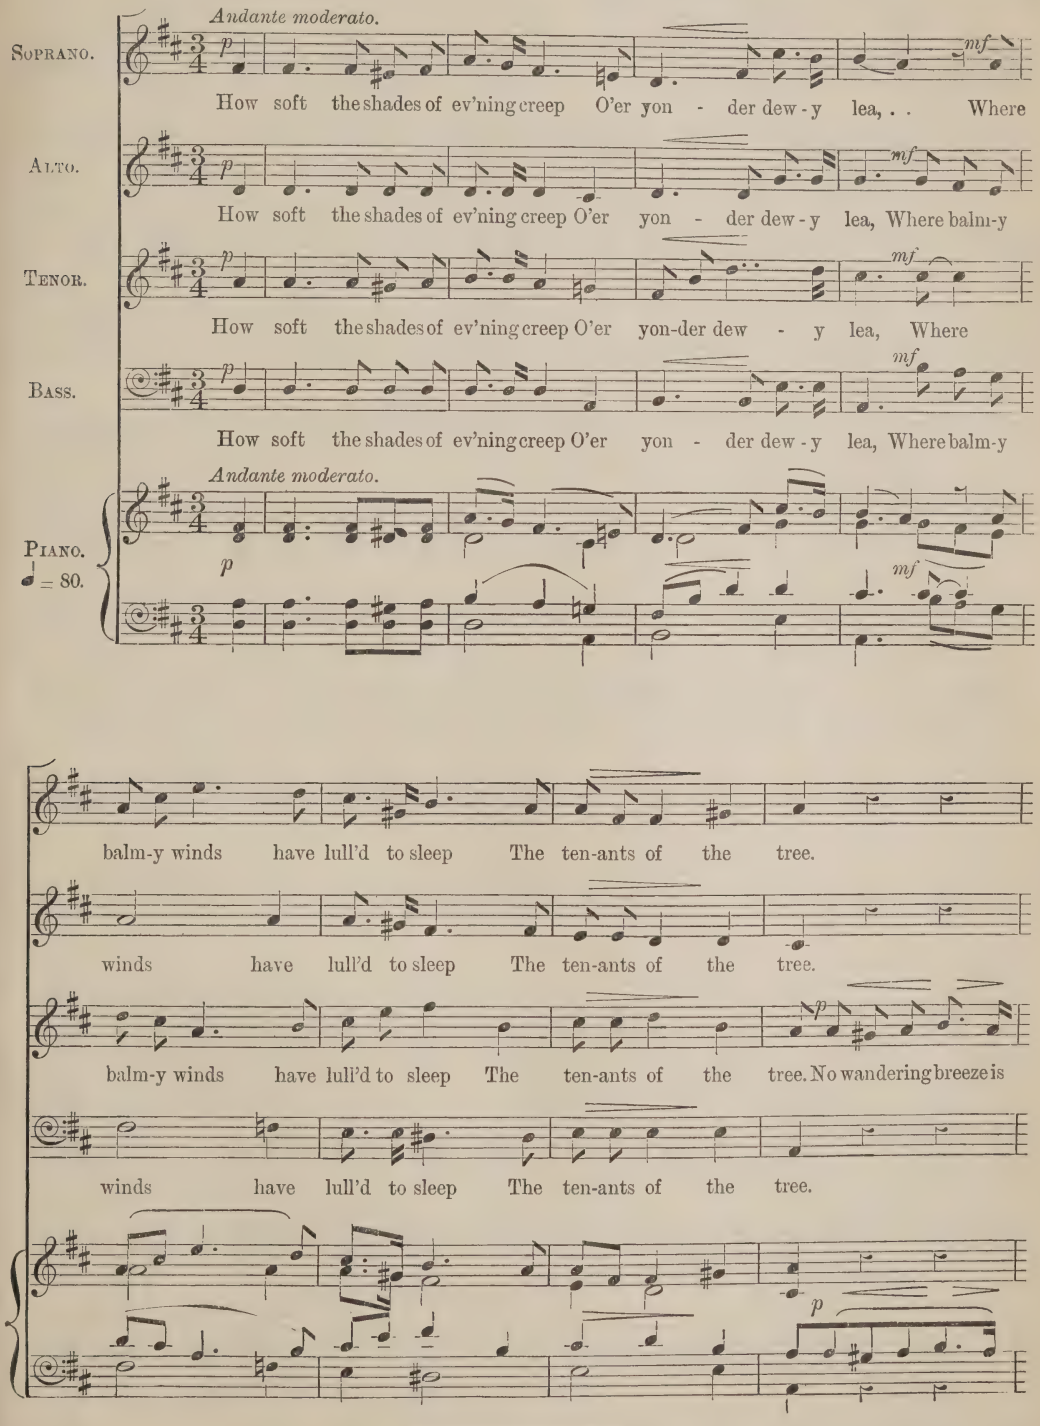
MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Although the list of Concerts for the coming season is still incomplete, we have already the promise of many good things. The Dundee Amateur Choral Union will give two Concerts, as usual. The works chosen for the first are Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Goring Thomas's posthumous work, "The Swan and the Skylark." The soloists for this Concert are Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Jeannie Rankin, and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and W. A. Peterkin.

Under the management of Messrs. Paterson, Sons and Co. there will be a subscription series of three Scottish Orchestral Concerts, and a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Eugene d'Albert, as well as two Military Concerts by the Band of the 1st Life Guards, which opened the season on the 19th ult.

There will be three Harrison-Simpson Subscription Concerts, at the first of which Madame Patti will appear. A long array of well-known artists is also included in this series. Messrs. Methven, Simpson and Co. promise, in addition, a Recital by M. Siloti, in December.



Concerts by local musicians are likely to be more numerous than ever. The Dundee Orchestral Society, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Scottish Musical Society will each give the usual number and will produce works by Dundee musicians. There will also be Chamber Concerts by Mr. W. P. Fleming, Mr. David Stephen, and Mr. A. Low.

The Dundee Society of Musicians opens its second season with a Lecture on Wagner, by Professor Fr. Niecks, on the 3rd inst., and this will be followed by a series of meetings, including Bach and Schubert Concerts.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

What promises to be a busy season begins early this month with such important events as the first appearance here of Mr. Eugene d'Albert and the annual visit of Dr. Richter with his band.

Most of the works promised by the choral societies this season are familiar, and it is a disappointment to find that no arrangement has been made for even one Choral Concert in connection with the Scottish Orchestra in Messrs. Paterson's scheme.

The Choral Union is engaged in the study of Berlioz's "Faust," which it gave under Mr. Henschel's direction three years ago. It also announces Mozart's "Twelfth Mass."

Mr. Kirkhope's Choir is to give "Samson" at its first Concert, and Mr. Millar Craig's Choir is preparing Cherubini's Requiem Mass.

The programme of Messrs. Paterson and Sons' tenth annual series of Orchestral Concerts shows an immense improvement on last year's scheme. The artists already announced include Mesdames Henschel and Saddler Fogg, Miss Ada Crossley, and Messrs. Holmes, Hedmondt, and Andrew Black; Mdlle. Soldat and Messrs. Willy Hess and Willem Kes; Fräulein Ilona Eibenschütz and Messrs. Sapellnikoff and D'Albert. The programmes have avoided the sins of omission and commission of last year, and Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Haydn, and Dvorák are well represented by symphonies, while important novelties are Tschaïkowsky's "Romeo and Juliet," German's new Suite, Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," &c. In one programme stand Spohr's Nonet, Schubert's Octet, and Beethoven's Septet, and in another the first Act from the "Walküre."

The great difficulties which the very inadequate accommodation of our Music Hall have always placed in the way of cheap concerts is at last to be removed. The whole city has been stirred to its depths in its efforts to suggest the best site for the new Music Hall, the munificent gift of Mr. Andrew Usher. This generous donor has placed £100,000 for the purpose in the hands of the Lord Provost and Town Council, and the work will be begun as soon as a suitable site is chosen.

Three interesting Concerts were given respectively on the 10th, 17th, and 24th ult., under the direction of Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, in the Oddfellows' Hall, Forrest Road. An admirably representative series of lyrics, glees, and part-songs were rendered in a meritorious manner, and the merit of Miss Gertrude Peppercorn's pianoforte playing at the final evening was fully appreciated.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The supplementary prospectus of the Choral and Orchestral Union shows that the coming season will extend over a period of sixteen weeks, from November 2 till Saturday, February 20, 1897. The scheme provides for fifteen Classical Concerts (twelve orchestral and three choral) and twelve popular Orchestral Concerts in St. Andrew's Hall. Mr. Willem Kes returns, of course, as conductor of the Orchestral Concerts, and Mr. Joseph Bradley will, as heretofore, direct the Choral Concerts. The list of works includes Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion Music, Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and Choral Symphony, as also Mendelssohn's "Elijah." Beethoven figures largely in the prospectus; he will, indeed, be represented by six Symphonies, three Pianoforte Concertos, the "Fidelio" (No. 4) and the "Coriolan" Overtures, and a selection from the Septet. Dvorák's E minor Symphony (from "The New World"), Tschaïkowsky's "Pathétique" Symphony, several standard Overtures, including examples of Wagner at his best, are also very welcome attractions, and in the miscellaneous section the management has provided a feast of good things. Mr. Edward German's four characteristic Dances and Suite for orchestra, Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "Burns" Rhapsody, Franz Liszt's compositions, and MacCunn's "The Ship o' the Fiend" are all promised, as also several important contributions from the works of Schubert, Brahms, and Grieg. A formidable array of soloists includes Lady Hallé, Misses Marie Brema, Fillunger, Crossley, Clotilde Kleeberg, Eibenschütz, Messrs. Hedmondt, Mills, Andrew Black, Willy Hess, Eugene d'Albert, and Leonard Borwick. The chorus is, of course, that of the Glasgow Choral Union; Mr. Berry is organist, and the band (the Scottish Orchestra, numbering eighty performers) will again be led by Mr. Maurice Sons. It only remains, then, for the musical public to accord the scheme substantial support; and, once more, we cannot too strongly urge the claims of the Choral and Orchestral Union. It is not, indeed, too much to say that they are of paramount importance, in view of the large losses hitherto incurred by the management.

At the Cathedral Concert, on the 19th ult., the Glasgow Choral Union revived many pleasing recollections of bygone days, when everybody flocked to the venerable edifice of an afternoon. On this occasion the dimensions of the audience showed that those Services of sacred music are as popular as ever. The selections were in the best of taste, Mr. Bradley had his forces in excellent order, and Dr. Peace lent his valued aid at the organ.

The Richter Concert is announced for the evening of the 22nd inst., when the programme will include familiar Wagnerian excerpts, two important works from the pen of Dvorák (to be heard for the first time in Glasgow), and Strauss's new composition "Till Eulenspiegel."

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

In the course of a week or so the musical season will come upon us with a rush, which will be all the more felt after an abnormally quiet summer. With Mr. F. H. Cowen as conductor, the first Philharmonic Concert is to be given on the 13th inst., and the remainder will, as usual, follow at intervals of about a fortnight. As previously announced, the choral performances are to be four in number, and will include Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Cowen's "Transfiguration," and Berlioz's "Trojans at Carthage." With regard to the last-named work, which will be thus heard for the first time in England, the following synopsis from the pen of Mr. F. H. Cowen will prove interesting:

"'The Trojans at Carthage' is the second of the two operas by Berlioz, which, together, have the comprehensive title of "Les Troyens," the first being entitled 'The siege of Troy.' It was first produced in Paris in 1863, at the Théâtre Lyrique, and had a run of thirty nights; and although the opera was a comparative failure with the general public at the time, its great merits were acknowledged by all the musicians and musical élite of Paris. It was revived at the Opéra Comique in 1892. The only other performance I know of was at Carlsruhe about three years ago, under the direction of Mottl. The plot deals principally with the love of Dido and Æneas, and the death of the former. The work is thoroughly characteristic of Berlioz's most matured style, it being, indeed, almost the last important thing he composed, and contains many numbers of great beauty and interest. "The performance in concert form by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society in March next will be the first complete one in this country, although short excerpts from the opera have at rare intervals been heard in the concert-room."

The Symphonies to be performed during the season are as follows: Beethoven's No. 7, in A; Haydn's in G, Letter V; Tschaïkowsky's No. 6, in E minor; Liszt's Poem, "Tasso"; Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade; Brahms's in C minor; and Raff's "Lenore"—a truly comprehensive catalogue.

The Musical Society is to remain under the direction of Mr. D. O. Parry, and the balance-sheet recently issued seems to be an encouraging document. There are now four hundred subscribing members, and four Concerts are announced at which Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Handel's "Messiah," and Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass will be given. The locale of these Concerts is St. George's Hall.

The Sunday Society announces twenty-eight Concerts and ten Lecture afternoons in the two halls, which the executive of this body has again obtained from the Corporation for the eleventh season. In the Picton Hall there will be ballad and chamber performances, recitals by Mr. Charles Fry, and lectures by eminent men, while St. George's Hall will be devoted to the more important departments of instrumental music, the permanent orchestra, under Mr. W. I. Argent, being increased to eighty players. The first gathering is on the 11th inst.

Mr. Rodewald's committee promise four smoking and three ladies' Concerts by the Liverpool Orchestral Society, the first appearance of which will be on the 17th inst. During the season the following Symphonies, together with a large number of other important works, are to be given: Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" in B minor, Schumann's in D minor, Stanford's "Irish," Mendelssohn's "Scotch," and one of Schubert's. The orchestra retains its previous strength, which is probably greater than any other similar organisation.

The Società Armonica, from the conductorship of which Mr. W. C. Cafferata has withdrawn after sixteen years' service, is in future to meet in the Caledonian Schoolroom, Oldham Street, on account of alterations in the Liverpool Institute, where the rehearsals have taken place uninterruptedly since 1853. The Concerts are to be given in the small room of St. George's Hall.

The winter evening entertainments begin on the 21st inst., with a military Concert by the band of the Royal Artillery, under Cavaliere Zavertal. Two excellent series of popular Concerts are to be given at Hope Hall, by Mr. T. Shaw and Mr. Percy White respectively.

The Schiever Quartet is to give four Concerts, as usual, and will return to its original quarters at what was formerly the Art Club, but which is now tenanted by the Liverpool College of Music. Messrs. Dreaper promise the usual number of classical Matinées at their rooms.

Too late for notice at present, the National Tonic Sol-fa Convention was announced for the 24th, 25th, and 26th ult., under the most promising auspices.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The great loss which befell us last year on the very eve of the commencement of our season called forth the most widespread sympathy and the zealous co-operation of all who could aid us in surmounting the difficulties so suddenly and unexpectedly besetting us. The foremost musicians of the Kingdom came forward to assist in tiding over the perplexities of the situation; and, fortunately, one of the ablest and most experienced of them was in a position to accept the responsibility of carrying on the important work with which Sir Charles Hallé had for so many years been associated. Before the close of the winter all fear was dispelled of any such disaster as would have been caused by a break in the continuity of the great undertaking which, during thirty-eight seasons, placed this city in the most enviable position with respect to music of the highest class. By constant work under one trusted and unfettered chief the Manchester Orchestra had acquired a completeness and finish impossible of attainment by any association of executants, individually of even higher executive capabilities, but brought together only occasionally and under less autocratic control; but Mr. Cowen at once proved his possession of the readiness of resource, and the prompt decision in moments of doubt necessary to a conductor called upon to superintend the interpretation of works of the most varied meaning, and expressed with all the elaboration and intricacy of modern scoring.

Messrs. Forsyth Brothers have done wisely in being unusually explicit in declaring their arrangements to secure the carrying on of the Thursday evening Subscription Concerts with even more than their former efficiency. The artists secured are more numerous than heretofore and of the highest available talent. Only one name is missing for which we earnestly looked—namely, that of the distinguished lady who, for so many years, was closely and affectionately associated with some of our chief musical delights. We hope that Lady Hallé may soon feel strong enough to meet, without overpowering pain, the audience of old friends and admirers which would only too gladly and sympathetically again listen to her matchless playing.

Messrs. Forsyth have cared also for the physical comfort of their subscribers, and are happy in being able to announce that "the old uncomfortable benches have been done away with, and that luxuriously upholstered chairs have been substituted." It was high time for such a change in the seating of our chief concert hall. The season will open on the 29th inst., when Señor Sarasate will play the Concerto in C minor of M. Saint-Saëns; and, during the winter, Gounod's "Redemption," Cowen's "Ruth," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will diversify the choral undertakings. Mr. R. H. Wilson, who rendered such important service last year, has remodelled the choir, weeding out the voices which had lost their freshness however reliable in attack they may have become.

Another most hopeful fact is that, after many years of hesitation and of fluctuation, the Saturday Evening Concerts will be placed upon a firm and reliable footing. Messrs. Forsyth avow their responsibility for a set of eight performances, with the full orchestra to which we are accustomed, under the guidance of its chief, Mr. Cowen. The difference between the Thursday and the Saturday evening programmes will lie chiefly in the greater liveliness of the latter; but with a resolute avoidance of all triviality and of the devotion of so capable a band to anything worthy of its power. No one who has ever noticed the immense crowds thronging Peter Street and Oxford Road on Saturday evenings could doubt the eagerness of the response which will be made to the invitation to be given to all lovers of music on November 7 and on many subsequent Saturdays.

Mr. G. W. Lane has issued a very attractive prospectus of five combined Choral and Orchestral Concerts with eminent principals, commencing on the 31st inst., and his enthusiastic friends will apparently have no cause of dissatisfaction. The Vocal Society of Dr. Henry Watson will be earnest as heretofore; Mr. Cross will cater spiritedly for the frequenters of the Association Hall; and Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne will, at the Town Hall, continue to charm the lovers of organ music.

As already reported, the Concert Hall in Peter Street, and, indeed, the whole block of buildings, has been sold for railway purposes, but as the ground will not be required for two years or thereabouts, the Gentlemen's Concerts will be continued, at any rate, in the meantime. Madame Albani is engaged for the first meeting.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The forthcoming Sheffield Musical Festival is the all-engrossing topic in musical circles here, and it is gratifying to find that there are excellent prospects of the venture proving successful. A guarantee fund of nearly £5,000 has been subscribed, and the applications for tickets show that the event is creating more than a local interest. Success is certainly deserved by the committee, whose untiring efforts have provided for every contingency in their arrangements for the management of the Festival and the comfort of the audiences. Profiting by the experience of other Festival committees, the Sheffield officials have completed their arrangements and find themselves well within their liberal estimates. The city is proud of its choral societies, and the flower of these is to be found in the Festival chorus. Under the painstaking care of Dr. Coward, the chorus-master, the preparation of the chorus is in a forward state, and it is anticipated that choral effects will be a striking feature of the performances. The Festival will consist of four Concerts, which will be given on the mornings and evenings of the 13th and 14th inst. Mr. August Manns will conduct, and the orchestra will consist of forty-four members of the Crystal Palace band, supplemented by nineteen local instrumentalists. The works to be performed are "Elijah" (Mendelssohn), "The Golden Legend" (Sullivan), "Job" (Parry), and "Faust" (Berlioz). The second and third Concerts will be completed with miscellaneous selections, among them being Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and Dvorák's "America" Symphony. Dr. Parry will conduct the performance of "Job" and Dr. Coward will direct his unaccompanied double chorus "The Word of the Lord giveth life." Mr. J. W. Phillips will play Handel's Organ Concerto (No. 2). The principal vocalists are Mesdames Ella Russell, Medora Henson, Ada Crossley, B. Burrell; Messrs. Ben Davies, Herbert Grover, Santley, Plunket Greene, David Bispham, Arthur Barlow, and Master Sterndale Bennett.

At the Winter Concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society Gounod's "Redemption" will be performed.

The Musical Union proposes to compliment its popular conductor, Dr. Coward, by giving a Concert, consisting of his compositions. "The Story of Bethany" will be the chief feature.

The Rotherham Choral Society announces "The Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," under Mr. T. Brameld.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society (Mr. A. Benton, conductor) announces a Concert performance of Gounod's "Faust," on December 10.

The Doncaster Musical Society has issued an attractive prospectus for the winter season. The chief works to be performed are Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Handel's "Samson" and "The Messiah." Mr H. McKenzie is the conductor

The Wash Choral Society announces the first Concert of its fifteenth season, under Mr. G. M. Coates. Handel's "Acis and Galatea" will occupy the first half of the programme.

The "Hymn of Praise" was performed in St. Mary's Church, Sheffield, on the 28th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The church choir of forty-five voices, supplemented by an equal number of selected choristers, sang the choruses, the soloists being Mr. William Foxon, whose singing in this work has won for him many successes, and Masters Dudley, Hallam and Lowe, members of the choir.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At Salisbury the Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Alfred Foley, will make its first appearance this season, on the 16th of next month, with an interesting and varied programme. The choral portion will include Gade's "Spring's Message" and Eaton Faning's "Song of the Vikings," and the orchestra will play Cowen's "Four English Dances." The Meister Glee Singers will also take part in the Concert.——The Sarum Choral Society has made a happy selection for its Christmas Concert, in the shape of Mr. J. F. Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner."

The Test Valley Musical Society's scheme for the season provides for three Concerts: two miscellaneous and one at which Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" will be given on a very complete scale. The first miscellaneous Concert is to take place on the 22nd inst., at Salisbury, and will be repeated at Winchester a week later. Brahms's "Song of Destiny" and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm will be included in the programme, and the Rev. E. H. Moberly will be in his usual place at the conductor's desk.

At Bournemouth, Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun., announces a series of sixty Symphony Concerts, to be given in the Pavilion during the winter months, on the same lines as last year. At the opening Concert, to be given on the 15th inst., the Symphony will be Schumann's No. 1, in B flat; Wagner's Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Grieg's Suite, "Sigurd's Jorsalfar," and Massenet's "Le Dernier Sommeil de la Vièrge" being also in the programme. On subsequent occasions orchestral works by Dvorák, Brahms, Max Bruch, and other contemporary composers are promised. Mr. D'Albert is announced to give a Pianoforte Recital in Bournemouth on the 9th inst.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

There has been very little doing in matters musical during the past month, but there are signs now of a gradual awakening of fresh activity.

At the Opéra, Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" was revived, on the 2nd ult., with Mdlle. Berthet as a charming interpreter of the part of Ophelia and M. Noté in the titular part. Mozart's "Don Giovanni," entirely remounted in every particular, is in active rehearsal, Madame Rose Caron being cast for the Donna Anna, Mdlle. Berthet for the Zerlina, M. Renaud for the part of the Don, and M. Delmas for that of Leporello. The receipts at the Opéra during the month of August amounted to 229,823 francs, being an average (on thirteen performances) of 17,678 francs per night.

The Opéra Comique re-opened its doors on the 16th ult. with Gluck's "Orphée," Mdlle. Delna being in the titular part and Mdlle. Marignan the Eurydice. The performance was an excellent one in every respect, and fully deserved the plaudits which a crowded audience lavished upon it. M. Danbé was the conductor. At this house also "Don Giovanni" is being most carefully remounted and rehearsed, with Mesdames Nina Pack and Gabrielle Lejeune, MM. Maurel and Fugère in the leading parts. M. Carvalho, the director, has just returned from Munich, where he had gone for the purpose of witnessing one of the special performances of Mozart's masterpiece, which are being given there just now. Madame Calvé, previous to her departure for the United States, will appear in some of her favourite characters—"La Navarraise," "Carmen," "Cavalleria," and others; and Mdlle. van Zandt's appearance is promised next month in "Manon," "Lakmé," "Mignon," and "Le Pardon de Ploërmel" ("Dinorah"). Amongst novelties here, M. Massenet's fairy opera "Cendrillon" will probably be first brought out, to be followed by a new opera "Kermaria," the libretto founded upon a Breton legend by M. Gheusi; the music by M. C. Erlanger.

Two of our eminent songsters have just left this capital for Milan, where they are to make their appearance at Signor Sonzogno's Lyric Theatre—viz., Mdlle. Sibyl Sanderson in M. Massenet's "Manon" and M. Saint-Saëns's "Phryné," and Madame de Nuovina, who was to make her début there in "La Navarraise."

A revival took place recently at the Variétés of Offenbach's "La vie Parisienne." Though considerably faded in parts and out of harmony with present-day taste, the sprightly music still exercises a certain electrifying power, and the revival must be pronounced on the whole a success.

M. Lassalle, the distinguished baritone of the Opéra, who a year or more ago retired from his professional career in order to devote himself to the manufacture of cement, has, to the great satisfaction of his numerous admirers, changed his mind. The artist has just entered upon a contract with Mr. Maurice Grau for a three months' season in the United States, along with Mesdames Calvé and Melba, and the brothers De Reszké. There is also every probability of his taking part, on his return, in the projected performance at the Opéra of Wagner's "Der fliegende Holländer."

A very interesting essay on Gluck's "Orphée" is just now being published in Le Ménéstrel from the pen of M. Julien Tiersot.

The prospectus of the twenty-sixth season of the Royal Choral Society contains the usual standard works. The subscription series will consist of eight Concerts, and the annual performances of "The Messiah" will be given on New Year's Day and Good Friday. The season will be commenced on the 29th inst., when Haydn's "Creation" will be performed, and Sir Joseph Barnby's unaccompanied anthem, "As we have borne the image of the earthy," will be sung in memoriam of the composer. The other fixtures are as follows: November 19, Sullivan's "Golden Legend"; December 10, Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"; January 21, 1897, Schubert's "Song of Miriam" and Handel's "Israel in Egypt"; February 11, Mendelssohn's "Elijah"; March 3 (Ash Wednesday), Gounod's "Redemption"; March 25, Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Dr.

Hubert Parry's "Job." For the final Concert, on May 6, "it is hoped that some work not hitherto performed by the Royal Choral Society may be given on this date." We trust so too. At any rate, there are plenty to choose from. It should be added that the vocalists engaged include Madame Albani, Mrs. Henschel, Miss Macintyre, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Clara Butt, Madame Marian McKenzie, Madame Belle Cole, and Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Ben Davies, Henschel, Andrew Black, Plunket Greene, Watkin Mills, Norman Salmond, and Santley. Professor Bridge will conduct, and Mr. H. L. Balfour will preside at the great organ.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society will give four Concerts, opening on the 28th inst. with a Recital of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" with the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Cowen; on December 26, the usual Christmas performance of "The Messiah"; on January 28, the "Creation" (Parts 1 and 2) and Stanford's "Revenge"; and on March 25, "Israel in Egypt." The last three Concerts will be under the direction of Dr. W. Lemare, the Society's new conductor, who has already secured the sympathies of the choir. The solo vocalists will include Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Zippora Monteith, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Thudichum, and Madame Ella Russell, Messrs. Hedmondt, Lloyd Chandos, Charles Manners, Watkin Mills, Andrew Black, and Edward Lloyd. A new orchestral scheme is being started under Dr. Lemare's direction, entitled the Midland Orchestral Union. The undertaking is after the model of the Manchester Orchestra, and some seventy applications for membership have already come in. It is proposed to give at least three Orchestral Concerts during the ensuing season.

It is not long since we had to chronicle the death of Alexander Ritter, which followed so shortly on that of his wife, Richard Wagner's niece, Franzisca, who some thirty years ago attained great eminence as an actress. He was best known in the musical world as the successful composer of two operettas, "Der faule Hans" and "Wem die Krone," which attained a wide popularity in Germany. Readers of The Musical Times may be reminded that our own reporter of the twenty-ninth festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein, held at Munich, in May, 1893, spoke very favourably of his so-called symphonic waltz, "Olafs Hochzeitsreigen," which, while still in manuscript, was one of the most successful of the novelties then brought forward. It is satisfactory to learn that this, together with other posthumous works of this composer, including Sursum Corda! a "Sturm und Drang" Fantasie for orchestra, will shortly be published by Messrs. Aibl of Munich.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union will give as usual three Subscription Concerts. On December 17, a Jubilee performance of "Elijah," with Mr. Santley in his famous interpretation of the part of the Prophet; the other soloists engaged being Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Hannah Jones, and Mr. Edward Branscombe. On February 24 the Committee will make what is considered a new departure, and in place of the usual oratorio or cantata give Schumann's beautiful music to Byron's "Manfred." The work contains a considerable amount of recitation with music and for this purpose the services of Mr. Charles Fry, who has made a special reputation in this branch of elocution, have been retained. For the third Concert, on March 31, Dr. Joachim, Miss Maggie Davies, and Signor Piatti have been engaged, and the choir of the Society will perform a selection of glees and part-songs. Mr. Kilburn will, as usual, be the conductor.

The most important of the various provincial Festivals to come is that of Norwich (details of which have already appeared in our columns), which begins on the 6th inst. and ends on the 9th inst. The North Staffordshire Festival will be held at Hanley on the 29th and 30th inst., and for which are in rehearsal a new work by Mr. Edward Elgar, entitled "King Olaf," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Barnby's "The Lord is King," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" and Choral Symphony, and Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." The principal artists engaged include Madame Ella Russell, Madame Medora Henson, and Messrs. Lloyd, Ben Davies, Andrew Black, and Ffrangcon-Davies. Dr. Swinnerton Heap will conduct. The selection for the Cheltenham Festival, to be held from November 3 to 5, comprises "The Golden Legend," "Elijah," and a new cantata, "Morning," by Dr. F. Iliffe.

"Handel's organ," in the chapel of the Foundling Hospital, is being renovated by Messrs. Hill, chiefly with regard to improvements in action and touch. This historical instrument is rightly called "Handel's organ," for although it was almost entirely rebuilt some fourteen years ago, some of Parker's original pipes still remain, and the fine case, which, of course, is all that the public can see of the instrument, is Handel's. It was given by the composer of "The Messiah" to the Foundling in 1750, and was then specially remarkable for having four quarter-notes in each octave and boasting three manuals, twenty-one stops, and 1,623 pipes. It was opened by Handel himself in 1750, when so great was the crush that gentlemen were requested "to come without their swords and ladies without their hoops."

Madame Mathilde Marchesi, the celebrated vocal teacher, in one of her charming periodical letters to the Editor of the Leipzig Signale, shows herself strongly opposed to the prevalent notion of the practice of cycling improving the singing voice. "It is the crowning folly on the part of certain teachers," says this eminently successful professor, alluding more particularly to the female voice, "to specially recommend the practice to their pupils. It may assist in developing the lungs of the more robust persons, but as regards the vocal organs, and the more delicate constitutions, I maintain that the rapid passage through the air may be a positive source of danger. I therefore prohibit this sport amongst all my singing birds."

The first performance took place, on the 20th ult., at St. Mary's Priory, in the Fulham Road, of a setting of the Magnificat in D, by Dr. J. Hornsey Casson. The work is laid out for soprano and tenor solos, quartet, chorus, organ, and orchestra, and is designed for festal use, for which it is admirably suited. The vocal portions, however, present no difficulties beyond the abilities of an average choir, the composer having reserved the chief contrapuntal writing for the orchestra. This body has an important part in the design, and is treated in an effective manner. The themes are melodious and expressive, and at the same time devotional and dignified.

M. Th. Radoux, the director of the Liège Conservatoire, has just published a catalogue of the Grétry Museum, founded and endowed by him in 1882, at Mons, the native town of the composer. This most interesting collection of music, books, pictures, autographs, letters, and other items referring to the life and work of the early representative of comic opera, is well worth a visit on the part of musical amateurs, and forms a Belgian pendant, on of course a more moderate scale, of the remarkable Richard Wagner Museum of Herr Oesterlein, now instituted at Eisenach.

Mr. F. Budge, who has just resigned the post of choir-master at St. James's, Piccadilly, and who took his farewell of the choir on Sunday night, the 13th ult., was presented by the boys and gentlemen of the choir and the clergy, organist, and churchwardens with a testimonial in the form of a massive gold signet ring, engraved with a suitable inscription. The Rev. Frank Smith made the presentation in the name of the donors, all of whom were present, to which Mr. Budge replied, expressing his regret at leaving the choir, with which he had been connected for so many years.

The following interesting International Prize Competition has been opened by the Musical Artists' Society of Barcelona—viz., A prize of five hundred francs for a Cantata for four solo voices, chorus, and orchestra; one of four hundred francs for a Suite in four movements for string orchestra; one of three hundred francs for a Mass in honour of St. Cecilia; and one of two hundred francs for six songs with pianoforte accompaniment, the words to be in any one of the modern romance languages. Competitors should send in their compositions not later than the 15th inst.

The prospectus of the twenty-ninth season of the South London Institute of Music testifies to vigorous life and continuance of zealous work. Six public Concerts are announced, the first of which is fixed for the 25th inst., when "Elijah" will be performed, under the conductorship of the Principal of the Institution, Mr. Leonard C. Venables. The choice for the other Concerts includes "Judas Maccabæus," "Cavalleria Rusticana," Schubert's Symphony in C, and operatic and orchestral selections.

It is satisfactory to find that the good work being done by the Portsmouth Orchestral Society in the cause of music has met with the appreciation it deserves. The works proposed for performance in the present season include several symphonies, overtures, and concertos by the greatest masters, and the selection indicates cultured taste and executive ability of no mean order. Mr. Churcher, the hon. conductor, is to be congratulated upon the success of his labours.

The balance-sheet of the twelfth annual Report of the South Shields Choral Society shows a substantial balance on the right side that speaks well for the attainments of this body and also for the musical taste of the neighbourhood. The first Concert of the forthcoming season is announced for December 2, when Mrs. Helen Trust, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. David Hughes are to take part in a performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea."

Miss Constance Bache has just completed the selection and translation of the "Early Letters of Hans von Bülow." This work, which was issued last autumn in German by Breitkopf and Härtel, was edited, and furnished with introduction, portraits, and notes, by Marie von Bülow, the widow of the virtuoso. To this Miss Bache adds a short English preface, and the volume will shortly be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

Madame Marian McKenzie and her concert-party, consisting of Miss Thudichum, Mr. Branscombe, and Mr. Douglas Powell, arrived at Plymouth, on the 17th ult., per steamship Australia, after a highly successful tour in Australia. The party travelled several thousands of miles by railway, appearing at, among other places, Adelaide, Melbourne, Victoria, Sydney, and Brisbane.

On the 15th ult., at Christ Church, Clapham, a solemn Requiem was sung for the Rev. Bradley Abbott, the late vicar. The musical portions of the service were very carefully rendered by an augmented choir, under the direction of Mr. George Way, the organist, the solos being sung by Mr. Cox, and the whole service was most impressive.

Three of Dvorák's latest compositions will be performed at the Richter Concerts, in the Queen's Hall, on the 19th and 26th inst. They are three orchestral Ballades, entitled "Der Wassermann," "Die Mittagshexe," and "Das Goldene Spinnrad." These pieces are still in manuscript and have not hitherto been performed in public.

An Organ Recital was given at St. Peter-upon-Cornhill on the 17th ult., by Mr. Edward Cutler, Q.C. The programme included pieces by Rheinberger, Handel, Gounod, and the performer, the latter consisting of an Offertory in B flat and Alla Gavotta. The vocalists were Miss Marian Spindler and Mr. Albert E. Turner.

The Wimbledon Male-Voice Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry W. Weston, will commence its third season on the 5th inst. The flourishing condition of the Society is very gratifying, for no country possesses a richer repertory of this branch of music, and its widespread appreciation is most desirable.

The fiftieth year of the production of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is to be duly celebrated by the Penzance and Camborne Choral Societies. Mr. J. H. Nunn will conduct a performance of the oratorio on December 8, at Penzance, and Mr. R. White, jun., is to direct the work on the following day at Camborne.

Herr Johannes Brahms has sent to the Committee of the Society of the Friends of Music at Vienna a cheque for £600. The money is to be devoted to any purpose which the Society may think will best advance the interests of the art of music.

M. Colonne will include in his opening programme at Queen's Hall, on the 12th inst., a selection from Berlioz's "Faust." Mdlle. Prégi will sing the part of Margaret.

The Gravesend and Milton Choral Association announces four Concerts for its nineteenth series. The 21st inst., Ballad Concert; December 9, Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise"; February 17, Miscellaneous Concert; and April 28, Concert Recital of "Maritana."

A special service was held on August 30 at Bromley-by-Bow Parish Church. Mr. George T. Pinches presided at the organ and played Wagner's Prelude to the third Act of "Lohengrin." Mr. Howard Reynolds played a cornet solo.

Mr. Percy Harmon, a clever young musician and pupil of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music, has gained the organ scholarship at Emmanuel College, Cambridge.

Madame Zippora Monteith has just returned from a successful tour in the United States, having appeared at many of the principal concerts and festivals in America.

The competition for the Henry Smart Scholarship took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 23rd ult., and was awarded to George D. Cunningham, of London.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Antwerp.—The Flemish Theatre announces the commencement of a new season on the 2nd inst. with an important new opera by a native composer, M. Jan Blockx, entitled "De Herbergprincess," the performance of which is looked forward to with much interest here. Another new work, "Pompeia," by M. Peter Benoit, the libretto founded upon Bulwer Lytton's novel "The last days of Pompeii," is likewise in course of being mounted at this theatre.

Baden-Baden.—Herr Richard Pohl, the well-known musical author, one of the very earliest champions of Wagner, entered, on the 12th ult., upon his seventy-first year.

Berlin.—Two complete performances of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," beginning in the last week in November, are announced to be given at the Royal Opera, with the following artists in the cast: Mesdames Ellen Gulbranson (Brünnhilde), Schumann-Heink (Erda and Waltraute), Herren Friedrichs (Alberich), Grüning (Siegfried), Vogl (Loge), Reichmann (Wotan), and Bachmann (Donner); Herren Friedrichs and Bachmann becoming permanent members of the Opera from May next. Performances here were resumed on the 16th ult., with "Le Nozze di Figaro," newly mounted.——The Philharmonic Concerts are announced to re-commence on the 12th inst, under Herr Nikisch's direction. Amongst new works to be produced during the season may be instanced Symphonies by Gernsheim (B flat major) and Widor (with organ), a Sinfonietta by F. E. Koch, Richard Strauss's "Zarathustra," and a "Fest-Ouverture" by Stenhammar. By invitation of the Berlin Wagner Society, Herr R. Strauss, of Munich, will conduct a grand Concert on November 2, in the hall of the Philharmonic Society, with compositions by Wagner, Liszt, Schillings, and some of his own.—— Herr Eugen von Taund's operetta, "Die Lachtaube," was performed for the first time at the Theater Unter den Linden on August 28, and was accorded a very favourable reception.——Under the title of "Franz Schubert," Herr Gustav Burchard has just completed a musical "Festspiel" with a view to the forthcoming centenary of the composer's birth. The work has already been accepted for performance by a number of German lyrical establishments. ——M. Vladimir de Pachmann, the well known pianist, has established himself here as a teacher of his instrument.

Bilbao.—A Congress for the reform of church music opened its deliberations in this town on August 31, many distinguished musicians from different parts of Europe being present, amongst them MM. Vincent d'Indy, Charles Bordes, and Paul Vidal, of Paris; Signor Zebaldini, of Padua; Señor Pedrell, the distinguished Spanish music-historian; Señor Monasterio, director of the Madrid Conservatorio, Professor Arin, and other composers and organists. The proceedings included the performance by the Bilbao Choral Society of compositions by the old Spanish masters, Victoria, Morales, and others, and the Congress was to conclude with a festival concert, in which Wagner's "Das Liebesmahl der Apostel" formed one of the principal features.

Breslau.—Four operatic novelties are now in course of being mounted by the very energetic management of the Stadt-Theater—viz., Giordano's "André Chenier," Mascagni's "Zanetto," Enna's "Cleopatra," and Stenhammer's "The Feast of Solhang"; two Italian one Danish, and one Norwegian composer, the native production being apparently at a discount.

Brussels.—The Théâtre de la Monnaie re-opened its doors on the 5th ult. with a performance of M. Saint-Saëns's "Samson et Dalila," the principal parts being sung by Madame Armand, M. Seguin, and the tenor, M. de la Tour, who made a most satisfactory début here on this occasion. "Manon," "Faust," and "Lohengrin" have been the works performed since.——Programmes of exceptional interest are foreshadowed by the Popular Concerts, conducted by M. Joseph Dupont, and those instituted last season by M. Ysaye, both of which re-commence in the course of this month. Herr Felix Mottl has been invited to conduct one or two of the latter Concerts, in which his wife will take part, while one of the Populars will be devoted chiefly to works by Herr Richard Strauss, under the composer's direction.——The jubilee of the institution of the electric telegraph was to be signalised, on the 27th ult., by a conference held at the Palais des Académies, and the performance by 200 telegraphists, under the direction of M. Vandamme, of a cantata written for the occasion by M. Paul Gilson.——A Society for "the cultivation and popularisation of ancient music" has been called into existence by a number of influential amateurs here, who have acquired the spacious locality known as the Monico, where Concert performances are to take place under the direction of M. Melant, a much esteemed conductor and composer in this city.

Buda-Pesth.—A cycle of operas, by Hungarian composers, was announced to commence at the Royal Opera at the end of last month. Meanwhile, a successful first performance has taken place of M. Charles Frotzler's new opera "Mathias Corvinus." The composer is the conductor of the private orchestra of the present Count Esterhazy, and, as such, one of the successors of Joseph Haydn.——A local singer here, named Solak, has been seeking the bubble reputation lately, at the Hotel Europa, by an unbroken display of his vocal powers for the space of twelve hours, in the course of which he "did" over two hundred and fifty songs, and that, of course, without either "bite or sup." Surely the development of modern executive musical "art" can no farther go!

Carlsruhe.—After an unusually prolonged vacation, during which some important structural alterations have been effected, the Court Theatre re-opened its doors on August 31 with a performance of Rossini's "Il Barbiere." The special representations illustrative of the history of comic opera, which were to be concluded on the 27th ult. with "Die Zauberflöte," under Herr Mottl's direction, have attracted many visitors, and proved a complete success.

Cologne.—Miss Marion Weed, a young American soprano, pupil of Frau Lehmann-Kalisch, made her début on the 6th ult., at the Stadt-Theater, as Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni," with brilliant success.

Copenhagen.—Two new operas by Scandinavian composers are in course of being mounted at the Royal Opera—viz., one in three acts entitled "Vifandaka," by Herr Alfred Toffs, and another, "Bagahijol," the music of which is composed by Herr Emil Hartmann, the gifted son of the veteran Danish composer of the same (Christian) name.

Dresden.—A new opera, "Der Liebe Macht" ("Love's Might"), by the young Norwegian composer, Gerhard Schjelderup, is to be brought out during the present season at the Hof-Theater. The work is said to be a virile production, full of bold and striking modulations, and, at the same time, abounding in melody; surely a promising prognostication. The long-promised revival, with entirely new scenery, of "Euryanthe" is also to be realised in the autumn.——Goldmark's "The Cricket on the Hearth" was given, for the first time, at the Royal Theatre, on the 5th ult., to a full house. The performance, under Herr Schuch's direction, was an excellent one, and confirmed the highly favourable impression produced by the new work at Vienna, Berlin, and elsewhere. It was given four times in the following week.——The new Concert Hall in course of construction in the Saxon capital, which promises to be one of the finest in Germany, is to be inaugurated on the 2nd of next month with a festal performance of the late César Franck's oratorio "Les Béatitudes."

Fermo.—An enthusiastic reception was accorded, on the 1st ult., to a new opera in two acts bearing the suggestive title of "Vendetta Sarda" (Sardinian Vengeance), the composer being the Maëstro Emidio Cellini.

Frankfort-on-Main.—Herr Hans Pfitzner's remarkable music-drama, first produced some time since at Mayence, is to be brought out this month at the Stadt-Theater, and is likewise being mounted at the Darmstadt Hof-Theater.——Herr Humperdinck (who has just received the title of Professor from the German Emperor) has resigned the post of musical critic, long held by him, of the Frankfürter Zeitung, and proposes to devote himself, on his newly acquired property, at Boppard on the Rhine, exclusively to composition.——Julius Stockhausen is about to undergo an operation for cataract in one of his eyes, from which he has suffered for some time past.

Gotha.—A monument has just been erected over a grave in the churchyard of Ruhla bearing the following inscription: "Georg Heinrich Lux, whilom organist of Ruhla, composer of the Thuringian folk-song 'Ach wie ist's möglich dann', born Feb. 2, 1779, died Jan. 16, 1861." The song in question has long been one of the most generally popular in the fatherland.

Hamburg.—The performances at the Stadt-Theater, under Herr Pollini's zealous management, have now been actively resumed. As the first novelty of the season a new dramatic opera (whatever may be implied by the term), by Herr W. Freudenberg, entitled "Johannis-Nacht," was announced for performance on the 20th ult. Herr Ignaz Brüll's new opera "Gloria" is also to be produced here for the first time on any stage.

Leipzig.—Mr. Henry Field, a gifted young pianist, pupil of Professor Krause, gave a Recital here on the 3rd ult., before a specially invited audience, and created a highly favourable impression in pieces by Beethoven, Weber, Chopin, and Liszt. Mr. Field is a Canadian by birth.——The performance by the Riedelsche Gesangverein of Handel's oratorio "Deborah," in Dr. Chrysander's version—postponed last spring on account of the illness of Dr. Kretzschmar, the conductor—is to take place on the 18th inst., and will be followed, probably in November, by that of "Hercules." These performances are looked forward to with much interest here as marking a new departure in the treatment of Handelian scores from a critically retrospective point of view.

Liegnitz.—Musik-Director Bilse, the once famous orchestral conductor, has just celebrated his eightieth birthday in this town, where he has lived in retirement for some years past. He was amongst the first to institute classical concerts at popular prices both in Berlin and in periodical tours throughout Germany.——Herr Ludwig Heidingsfeld, well known as the composer of several symphonic poems, for the last twelve years conductor of the Liegnitz Sing-Akademie, has accepted the post of director of the Philharmonic Society in Dantzig.

Lyons.—Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" is in course of preparation at the Grand Théâtre here, and the directors announce its production before the Paris première of the work. The town will thus gain the distinction of being the first to introduce that masterpiece to a French audience.

Madrid.—Performances at the Royal Opera will be resumed this month, and much interest is shown by the public in regard to the promised first production here of Wagner's "Der fliegende Holländer," under the title of "El Buque fantasma," and "Die Walküre." Madame Patti is expected to give some farewell performances to Madrid audiences, and Madame Melba and M. van Dyck are also to make their appearance during the season.

Milan.—The operatic prize competition instituted some time since by the impresario Steiner has brought forward no less than 193 competing works. None of these, it appears, has been deemed worthy of the first prize of 3,000 lire, while the second prize of half that sum has been awarded to Signor Vanbianchi for an opera, "The Ship," and three additional prizes of 500 lire each were accorded to the Maëstri Gianetti, Orefice, and Collini for their operas "The Violin-maker of Cremona," "The Gladiator," and "The Creole" respectively. All these works are to be performed here in the course of the next few weeks.——Verdi has come over here lately from Genoa to see his friend Arrigo Boito and the latter's brother, Camillo, the architect of the asylum founded by the veteran Maëstro, now in course of erection. On his arrival at the Hôtel de Milan, the daughter of the proprietor handed him a beautiful lyre made of flowers. "Your lyre is worth a great deal more than mine," smilingly responded the composer, "for mine is broken and has no more strings left." As a set-off against this implied unproductivity of the composer of "Falstaff," a Naples journal has it upon "unimpeachable authority" that Verdi, having abandoned all further projects for the lyrical stage, has nearly completed the score of a grand oratorio of a type similar to Mendelssohn's "Elijah." An unlooked-for development, indeed, if true, though none the less welcome.

Minden.—A pleasant little surprise is in store for the German Emperor, who, on his expected visit here, on the 18th inst., is to be greeted at the Porta Westfalica by the united efforts of seven hundred trombone players from the district, which would seem to be peculiarly productive of the species. The salvos from this heavy musical artillery are, however, to be varied by the comparatively unobtrusive discourse, on the part of five hundred male voices, of some choral numbers. Altogether, the homage rendered to his Majesty will be an imposing one.

Moscow.—The Concerts of the Philharmonic Society here will be conducted this season by Dr. Richter, Herr Mottl, Dr. Muck, and Herr R. Moszkowski.——The last orchestral composition by Tschaïkowsky, a symphonic poem entitled "Vojevoda," is about to be published. The work was produced at a Concert given here in 1891 by M. Siloti, under the composer's direction. It was, however, coldly received, and Tschaïkowsky, in a passion, there and then tore up his score. But there were the orchestral parts still left, which M. Siloti carefully preserved, thus rescuing an interesting and characteristic composition from oblivion.

Pará.—Senhor Carlos Gomez, the Brazilian composer and director of the Conservatorio here, whom rumour had pronounced dead not long since, is greatly improved in health and about to re-visit Italy, which had been his home for many years.

Prague.—Amongst the novelties to be produced during the season just commenced at the German Theatre are Goldmark's "The Cricket on the Hearth," Enna's "Aucassin and Nicolette," and Langer's "Der Pfeifer von Haardt." Zdenko Fibich has completed the score of a new opera, "Sarka," which is to be first produced at the National Theatre. He is already engaged upon another operatic work.

Rome.—Among the considerable number of new operatic works to be produced during the coming season may be mentioned one entitled "Camargo" by the Maëstro De Leva, of which rumour speaks very highly, and which will be first brought out at the Argentina Theatre here. At La Scala, of Milan, Signor Leoncavallo's "La Bohême" and Signor Mascagni's new Japanese opera "Iride" will be produced, while Baron Franchetti's "Pourceaugnac" is down for performance at the San Carlo Theatre, Naples.

St. Petersburg.—Previous to her departure for the United States, Madame Teresa Carreño, the eminent pianist, will undertake an extensive concert tour in different parts of the Russian empire.

Stockholm.—The seventieth birthday has just been celebrated here, amidst numerous demonstrations of popular sympathy, of Ivar Hallstroem, the gifted composer and dramatic author, who was the first to produce a Swedish national opera and some of whose dramas are likewise founded upon episodes in the history of his country.

The Hague.—A festival Concert, dedicated to Belgian musicians, was held on the 8th ult., at the Kursaal of Scheveningen, under the auspices of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Herr Mannstaedt, and with the co-operation of the pianist, M. de Greef, Madame Jeanne Flament, and other artists. Amongst the works included in the programme were an overture, "Polyeucte," by M. Tinel; the fifth Symphony of M. Samuel; a "Kermesse," by M. Blockx, and songs by MM. Gevaert, Waelput, and others. There was an enormous audience.

Toulouse.—M. Paul Vidal, the conductor of the Paris Opéra, who has been staying here during the summer, has completed a new opera, "Gauthier d'Aquitaine." The work is to be produced at the Opéra next year, directly after Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" has been mounted.

Venice.—A memorial tablet has been placed on the palace where the famous composer of "Il Matrimonio Segreto" died, the simple inscription being: "Here lived and died Cimarosa." The composer was born in 1754 at Naples, and began life as a baker's boy. His musical talent having attracted the attention of Aprile, a famous singer at the time, he was sent by him to study at the Naples Conservatorio. "Il Matrimonio Segreto," his operatic masterpiece, was first produced in 1792 at Vienna. He died on January 11, 1801, and was buried in the Church of the Campo Sant' Angelo, which was demolished by the Austrians in 1828, and his grave is no longer traceable.

Vienna.—The first performance outside of Italy of Signor Mascagni's one-act opera or duologue, "Zanetto," took place on the 1st ult., at the Theater-an-der-Wien. The success was moderate, although the interpreters, Mesdames Gemma Bellincioni and Lili Lejo met with frequent applause. In the opinion of the critics, the libretto, founded upon Coppée's "Le Passant," is ineffective, and the score, while containing some melodious numbers, is characterised by "continual unrest without real movement."——Franz Schubert's opera, "Der vierjährige Posten," adapted for the modern stage, with added recitatives by Dr. Robert Hirschfeld, has just been published by the firm of Joseph Weinberger. It is to be performed in connection with the Schubert centenary in January next, both here and elsewhere.——In honour of the Czar's visit, M. Massenet's "Manon" and the ballet, "Wiener Walzer," were given at the Imperial Opera, and a gala Concert was given at the Court. Dr. Hans Richter, who conducted the performances, received a decoration from his Majesty of Russia, and also the gift of a gold cigar-case with the Russian eagle set in diamonds. The genial conductor, on the same occasion, received the order of the Iron Crown from his Austrian Majesty.——An operetta, "Der Duckmäuser," by the Hungarian composer, Joseph Bokor, was brought out at the Carl Theater on the 5th ult., with considerable success.——Dr. Brahms has just published his Op. 121, four songs for a bass voice.

Wiesbaden.—The Royal Theatre here, which is under the same management as the Berlin Opera, is to have two permanent conductors in future. Herr Max Schillings's "Ingwelde" is to be brought out during the present month, and Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" is in course of being mounted.

OBITUARY.

It is with great regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. Gilbert R. Betjemann, which occurred on Wednesday, the 9th ult., at Grindelwald, by a fall while making the descent of the Wetterhorn. The deceased, who was the only son of Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the well-known leader of the Royal Opera orchestra, had accompanied his father and stepmother on a holiday tour through Holland, Bavaria, and Switzerland, and had parted from them at Grindelwald, remaining there alone in order to further explore the neighbourhood. His death was occasioned by the collapse of a snow bridge between a glacier and a rock which caused him, together with his guide, who was much hurt, to be precipitated into the crevasse beneath. Mr. Betjemann was only thirty-one years of age and an accomplished musician. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music, where his father is one of the leading professors, and gained the Santley Prize in 1886. On leaving he was elected an Associate of that Institution. He occasionally conducted concerts in London, but was best known as a talented violinist at the Opera, at the leading Festivals, and in our chief concert orchestras, while he was also rapidly making a reputation as a teacher of singing. As a composer his best work was "The Song of the Western Men," a choral ballad in which distinct talent was manifest. Smaller pieces, notably a setting of Shelley's poem "As the moon's soft splendour" and a "Sérénade Espagnol" for violin, also testified to a refined taste and considerable originality. The deceased was, moreover, a musician whose knowledge and reading extended beyond that of his profession. The funeral took place on the 19th ult., at Finchley, and was attended by Mr. Corder and Mr. F. W. Renaut, representing the Royal Academy of Music; Mr. Mortimer Jones, Highbury Philharmonic Society; Mr. Kronke, Highbury School of Music; Mr. Chatfield and Mr. Vinning, Incorporated Society of Musicians; and a large number of sympathetic friends.

Mr. William Makepeace, for upwards of fifty years lay clerk and Master of the Choristers' School at Rochester Cathedral, died on the 11th ult., at Rochester, in his seventy-sixth year. The deceased was a choirboy at St. Paul's, having been, as such, subjected to the rigid régime of Hawes, and in 1845 he obtained the appointment at Rochester, where he remained all his life. He had served under no fewer than five Bishops, four Deans, and three Archdeacons. One of the most hardworking of men, he, in addition to his duties as lay clerk and schoolmaster, filled the post of librarian of the Cathedral music, conducted several choral societies in the city and neighbourhood, gave many private lessons in singing, and trained choirs innumerable. It is, however, as schoolmaster of the choristers that he will be best remembered, and in this capacity he was the early teacher of a large number of eminent musicians, including Professor Bridge, now conductor of the Royal Choral Society, and his brother, Dr. Joseph Bridge, of Chester Cathedral; Dr. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral; Dr. Armes, of Durham; the late Joseph Maas, and others, all of whom as boys sang in the Rochester Cathedral choir. The boys, moreover, were taught conscientiously and well, and the affection and esteem in which the master was held by them found its special outward expression in the handsome presentation made to him on the completion of his jubilee, in January of last year, by his old pupils and friends. Mr. Makepeace had resigned the schoolmastership, while still retaining the post of lay clerk to the Cathedral, some ten years since, finding the duties becoming too heavy for him. He only finally retired on his pension some few months ago. Mr. Makepeace was one of the original members of the Choir Benevolent Fund. At the funeral, on the 17th ult., the first part of the service, which was choral, was held in Rochester Cathedral, Dean Hole officiating. There was a large congregation, and the mourners included several distinguished former pupils of the deceased choirmaster.

We record, with regret, the death, on the 2nd ult., in London, of Miss Alexandra Leah Ehrenberg, the well-known concert vocalist and teacher. She was a pupil of Mr. Eyre, Sir George Macfarren, and Signor Randegger, at the Royal Academy of Music, where she gained successively the bronze, silver, and gold medals for singing, and eventually became an Associate of that Institution. Miss Ehrenberg was in the possession of a sympathetic mezzo-soprano voice, and, in the earlier part of her career, frequently sang at the leading oratorio and other concerts, both in the metropolis and the provinces, where she was much appreciated. Of late years, however, the deceased lady had devoted herself almost exclusively to teaching, more especially at the Guildhall School of Music, where her class was one of the largest in the Institution. She was in her thirty-fourth year.

Gilbert Louis Duprez, the famous French tenor, died in Paris on the 23rd ult., at the age of ninety. He was born at Paris in 1806, and made his first appearance in 1820 at the Théâtre Français; he came out in opera at Paris in 1825, as Count Almaviva in "The Barber of Seville." He sang with great taste, and was, moreover, an excellent actor. M. Duprez wrote several works, including the operas "Jeanne d'Arc," "La Lettre au bon Dieu," "Joanita," &c.

An organist of some note has passed away recently in the person of Mr. James Dace, of Colchester, in his seventy-sixth year. He was born at Wittam, and was a pupil of Mr. George Cook. He took a very active share in the foundation of the Colchester Musical Society, and was organist of three churches in the borough.

Joseph Rudolph Schachner, an accomplished pianist and able composer, died on August 15, at Reichenhall, in Bavaria. He was born on December 31, 1821, at Munich, and was a pupil of Henselt and J. B. Cramer, under whose guidance he became a pianist of considerable attainments, and his success achieved in concerts at the Bavarian capital, at Leipzig, Paris, and elsewhere quickly established his reputation. In 1853 he settled in London, where, both as an interpreter, more especially of the classical masters, and as a teacher, he was greatly appreciated. He subsequently removed to Vienna, and his later years were spent alternately in that capital and his native Munich. He was the composer of an oratorio, "Israel's return from Babylon," of two pianoforte concertos, and of a number of minor pieces for the same instrument.

The death occurred, on the 1st ult., at Gmünden (Austria), of Johann Evangelist Habert, organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral, one of the most distinguished contemporary composers of Catholic Church music. He was a native of Bohemia, having been born at Oberplan on October 18, 1833. An able and learned author, and editor for many years of a periodical devoted to his art, the deceased contributed largely to the cause of elevating the standard of Catholic Church music both in Austria and Germany. A complete edition of Habert's numerous compositions is at the present moment being prepared by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig.

Johann Friedrich Luther, said to be a direct descendant of Dr. Martin Luther, died recently at New York, at the age of ninety. Born on November 24, 1806, at Aslar, near Wetzlar, Johann learned carpentry and also organ-building and pianoforte making. He made the first upright grand pianoforte, and in New York, where he settled in 1837, founded the first pianoforte manufactory there. A close friendship united him throughout life with Carl Steinway and the elder Sohner, his early companions.

The death is announced, on August 16, at Liège, of Edouard van den Boorn, a distinguished musician and musical critic, in his sixty-seventh year. He was a pupil of the Liège Conservatoire and an excellent organist and pianist. He had also rendered himself, by special study, a virtuoso on the harmonium, the distinctive character and resources of which instrument he was able to develop in a truly artistic manner. His numerous compositions for the instrument have attained great popularity. As musical author and critic Van den Boorn has become widely known, and his work entitled "De l'Influence réciproque de l'Industrie sur les Beaux-Arts" obtained for him the gold medal from the Belgian Government. He was a contributor to numerous French and Belgian periodicals and the musical critic for many years of the Belgian journal La Meuse.

A well-known operatic bass singer and talented composer, Albert Eilers, died at Darmstadt, on the 4th ult., at the age of sixty-five. He had been latterly an honorary member of the Darmstadt Opera, at which establishment he was first engaged in 1882. After studying at the Milan Conservatorio, Eilers made his début at the Dresden Court Theatre in 1854, as Orovisto in "Norma." From 1858 to 1865 he was engaged at the German Theatre in Prague, where he was a general favourite, and afterwards at Coburg, he being by that time justly regarded as one of the foremost bassos of the German lyrical stage. In 1876 Wagner selected him for the part of the giant Fasolt in the original Bayreuth Festspiele. An earnest and thoroughly competent musician, he was the composer of an operetta, "Spielmannslied," of a comic opera, "Johannis-Nacht," of a Mass and a Requiem.

Mr. Percy Gaunt, a well-known composer of American popular songs, died in a village in the Catskills, of consumption, on the 5th ult., aged forty-four. Of one of Gaunt's songs, "Push dem clouds away," it is said that a quarter of a million copies have been sold. Among his other favourite ditties were "The Trip to China Town," "The Bower," and "The Milk White Flag."

We have to record the death, on August 17, at Mannheim, of Frau Bertha Becker (née Seib), the widow of Jean Becker, the celebrated violin virtuoso, at the age of sixty-two. Two of her sons, the Leipzig violinist and the violoncellist residing at Frankfort-on-Main, brilliantly carry on the musical traditions of the family.

From Hamburg comes the news of the death there, on the 22nd ult., of Frau Katharina Klafsky, the well known German prima donna, after a short but severe illness. She had been obliged recently to undergo an operation on the head, which was followed by several days of unconsciousness, and in the end proved fatal. The deceased lady, who was only in her thirty-second year, was a Hungarian by birth, of poor parentage, and when quite young attracted the attention of Professor Helmesberger, of Vienna, at whose recommendation she was taken in hand by that eminent vocal teacher, Madame Marchesi. Subsequently for a number of years she was one of the leading members of Herr Angelo Neumann's "Wagner Theatre," and as a dramatic soprano took high rank in Germany. She made her début at Drury Lane, in 1892, in "Fidelio," and afterwards also appeared in Wagnerian opera at the same theatre. Frau Klafsky was married three times, her third husband having been Herr Lohse, the Drury Lane conductor.

We have also to record the following deaths:—

On August 16, at Sondershausen, at an advanced age, Councillor Friedrich Laue, distinguished musical amateur, friend of Liszt and Joachim Raff, one of the earliest literary champions of Richard Wagner.

On August 16, at Boston (U.S.), John B. Stettson, well-known impresario and theatrical manager.

On August 22, at Frankfort-on-Main, Leopold Lichtenstein, founder of the pianoforte manufacturing firm of L. Lichtenstein and Co., aged seventy-seven.

On August 23, at Ancona, Benedetto Zaban, composer of several operas performed at Ancona, aged sixty-five.

On August 25, at Vienna, Wilhelm Wiesberg, concert singer, particularly of Wiener Lieder, aged forty-six.

On August 26, at Vienna, Anton Amon, vocalist, aged sixty-three.

At Milan, Carlo Gomes, celebrated musical composer. He was born in Brazil and studied at the Conservatoire at Milan. His best-known operas are "Il Guarany" and "Salvator Rosa."

At Brunswick, on the 19th ult., Frau Caroline Fischer-Achten, in her 91st year. She made her début as a prima donna soprano at the Vienna Opera in 1821, and afterwards held a leading position in the Opera-houses of Frankfort and Brunswick, but she retired into private life upwards of forty years ago.

Recently, at Naples, Domenico Laboccetta, composer, an intimate friend of Meyerbeer.

A PLEA FOR ANTIPHONAL CHANTING IN HALF-VERSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—As the real grounds for chanting the Psalms in half-verses appear to be little known or understood, I ask your permission to state the principles on which the practice is based.

1. Antiphonal chanting (i.e., alternate chanting by two bodies of singers) is not only an ancient practice extending back to Jewish times, it is also a (if not the) most appropriate method of rendering the Psalms in liturgical worship.

2. Antiphonal chanting should be strictly responsory—i.e., the sentence or clause sung by the second set of singers must be a true answer or correspondent expression to the sentence or clause enunciated by the first set of singers. The common "verse-and-verse-about" method of recitation has no reason to recommend it; it is the unintelligent way in which school children are taught to read the Bible.

3. Musical antiphony must be based on poetical correspondence.

4. Poetical correspondence in the Psalter is found—

(a) In a close or strong form within the verse—i.e. between the component parallel members.

(b) And in a loose or weak form between the verses. The former runs throughout the Psalter (except, perhaps, Psalm 137) normally in a binary form, exceptionally (to the extent of twelve per cent.) in a ternary or quaternary form; the colon stop divides the binary form, and for the most part the quaternary, into balanced halves, leaving a small number of verses containing three members unequally divided, and treated practically as in the binary form, the bipartite structure of the chant, whether ancient or modern, necessitating this arrangement.

The looser correspondence between the verses is too rare and irregular to form an exclusive basis for musical antiphony.

5. Parallelism within the verse (which for brevity I may term half-verse parallelism) runs prominently and persistently throughout the Psalter, and is therefore the only satisfactory basis for antiphonal chanting.

6. Ample provision, however, for the rarer forms of correspondence is secured by the use of double and multiple chants sung in half-verses; thus sung they mark the parallelism within the verse, as well as that which is exterior to it.

A few objections stated and answered.

1. However desirable half-verse chanting may be for some Psalms, there are many cases in which it cuts up a sentence and so breaks the continuity of ideas.

Answers: (a) This division into parallel clauses is part of the essential structure of the Psalms, and cannot therefore be ignored in the music or mode of chanting.

(b) The same objection would apply to the Versicles and Responses, which are really half-verses (many being taken from the Psalms), and are chanted by the priest and congregation alternately.

2. Half-verse chanting breaks the continuity of many double chants in which there is a correspondence between the first and third, and sometimes between the second and fourth phrases.

Answer: The use of such chants for the Psalms, however satisfactory from a musical point of view, is misleading, since it suggests a correspondence in the words which for the most part does not exist, while it ignores the close correspondence which runs through every verse. Composers should write chants in conformity with the structure of the Psalms, as Havergal, Elvey, Barnby, and others have done.

3. The Psalm verse is not always divided into two parallel halves; many verses contain three or more members.

Answer: See under the fourth head above.

4. There is no liturgical precedent for half-verse chanting.

Yet (a) some Psalms (as 24th and 136th) were probably so sung by the Jews.

(b) That very ancient method of liturgical worship by Versicle and Response is entirely a half-verse system; the principle, therefore, has a good precedent.

(c) The practice is not unknown in the Roman Church (see Mendelssohn's Letter, June 16, 1831).

(d) Christ Church, Oxford, York Minster, and many other churches have adopted the practice for some years, and it continues to spread, being founded on truth.

I remain, yours truly,

Henry J. Poole.

Stowell Rectory, Sherborne.

WORDS TO PIANOFORTE SCORES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—I would wish to call your attention to what I consider to be a curious oversight on the part of the foreign and English music publishers. Most of the great firms issue the principal operas, oratorios, cantatas, &c., in two forms—as complete vocal score (with text) and for pianoforte solo (without anything else). Now, I contend that, while it is true that the great majority (I hope) of professional musicians and even a large number of amateurs are able, when playing the pianoforte, to take in six or more lines at a glance, and may thus enjoy to the full the advantages of the vocal scores, there exists, at the same time, a numerous class of music-lovers that have not the time, inclination, or the ability to perfect themselves in this special branch of musical execution. For the benefit of these I would suggest that the two forms of arrangement hitherto in vogue should be amalgamated, and the works in question be edited for pianoforte solo plus the text. This would, of course, while not interfering in any way with the further publication of the vocal scores, render entirely superfluous the arrangements for pianoforte solo now in use, as I do not think there are any players, however unintelligent or inferior, who would not prefer to know what they are playing about (if I may be pardoned the expression) when they have the chance of doing so under the same conditions as before—that is to say, with no greater tax on their capacity or energy. It goes without saying that the same method could be applied to the arrangements for four hands.—I am, Sir, faithfully yours, Hermann Oelsner.

Springfield, Honor Oak Park.

A VISIT TO THE GRAVE OF POTTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Will you, through your valued paper, let the recipients of Cipriani Potter's Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music know that the grave, No. 20,357, at Kensal Green Cemetery, is allowed to remain neglected, with Mr. Potter's name, &c., nearly obliterated, when for a few shillings the letters could be filled in and made legible to all participators in the benefits of his scholarship. In memory of him who was once Principal of their Academy, a great master, and the late head of the musical profession, let me beg of your insertion of this from a poor and aged pupil, as, in justice to the Academy itself, that great master should not lie neglected and forgotten by us or the scholars receiving the benefit of his bounty.—Yours obediently, Anthony Pollon.

28, Barnsdale Road, West London.

MR. CORDER v. CHARLES GOUNOD. Re BERLIOZ.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—As one of those who attended Mr. Corder's Royal Institution Lectures and who heard with feelings of surprise and pain (to use no harsher term) that gentleman's depreciatory remarks on the music of Hector Berlioz, I venture to ask for the insertion in your widely-read columns of some remarks by Charles Gounod on the subject, which it seems to me give a much more accurate resumé of the case than the letter of Mr. Corder which appears in your last issue. I quote Gounod's observations from the translation of his "Autobiographical Reminiscences," recently published by Mr. Heinemann. After a few remarks on the personal peculiarities of Berlioz, he says: "His 'Symphonie Fantastique' was a real event in the musical world, the importance of which may be gauged by the fanatical admiration and the violent opposition it aroused. Admitting that a work of such a nature may be open to much discussion, the fact that its composer possessed most remarkable inventive power and a powerful poetic sentiment (which re-appears in all his subsequent compositions) still remains evident.

"Berlioz has put into musical circulation, so to speak, a large number of orchestral effects and combinations which were unknown before his time and which have been adopted by very illustrious musicians indeed. He has revolutionised the art of instrumentation, and in that respect, at all events, may be said to have 'founded a school.'"

Now, Sir, whilst I fully admit that Mr. Corder's opinions are entitled to respectful consideration, I cannot help placing still higher those of the composer of "Faust," the "Redemption," and "Mors et Vita."—Truly yours,

A Lover of French Music.

BACH'S MOTET "I WRESTLE AND PRAY."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Mr. F. G. Edwards, in his interesting article on "Bach's Music in England" in this month's Musical Times, speaks of John Christian Bach's music as being "quite forgotten."

I have always understood that the fine Motet for double choir, "I wrestle and pray," though frequently attributed to the elder Bach, is really the work of his son.

I should like to be enlightened on the subject.

Yours faithfully,

Henry Knight.

St. Ives, Cornwall,
September 5, 1896.

[The Motet "I wrestle and pray" ("Ich lasse dich nicht") was always considered to be the composition of John Sebastian Bach, but never, so far as we are aware, of his son, John Christian Bach. The highest authorities now attribute it to John Christopher Bach (1642-1703), of Eisenach, a first cousin once removed of J. Sebastian Bach's. The similarity of the initials—"J. C."—tends to cause confusion in distinguishing these two members of the great Bach family.—Ed., M.T.]

THE LATE MR. HOLDICH.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—In your obituary notice of September there are two slight inaccuracies respecting George Maidwell Holdich. In the first instance, he did not construct the organ at Islington Parish Church, which was built by Byfield and Green in 1771; secondly, the stop he invented was called "diaocton" (not di-octon), a genuine octave coupler, each row of pipes having an extra octave on the soundboard. As the writer of the late Mr. Holdich's Jubilee article in a musical contemporary (1887) you will excuse me drawing attention to the above facts.

Yours truly,

September, 1896. Carolus Rex.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Auckland, New Zealand.—A new three-manual organ by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield, was dedicated, on Sunday, July 19, by the Most Rev. the Primate of New Zealand, for use in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. The instrument contains all the modern improvements of this firm, and tubular pneumatic action is applied to every movement. The services were largely attended and the music was excellent. The anthems were Stainer's "I am Alpha and Omega" and Ouseley's "It came even to pass." A selection from Gaul's "Holy City" was also sung during the offertory collection. A series of three Recitals was subsequently given by Mr. T. Tallis Trimnell, who came up voluntarily to help his old friend, Mr. V. E. Rice, on the completion of his twenty-seventh year of office as organist and choirmaster of the church. All the Recitals were greatly appreciated by crowded congregations and the offerings amounted to £190, sufficient to defray the balance of the cost of importing and erecting the organ.

Denbigh.—Two Organ Recitals were given in St. David's Church, on the 7th ult., by Mr. Alfred H. Allen. The programmes contained Mendelssohn's second Organ Sonata in C minor and several other attractive pieces. Miss Hazledin contributed several songs.

Dunedin, New Zealand.—The Liedertafel opened the eleventh season by a Concert on July 28. The first part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included songs contributed by Messrs. F. L. Jones, J. Jago, and D. Hutton, and Raff's Tarantelle in D minor, played as a pianoforte duet by Messrs. Timson and Taylor. Dr. J. H. Mee's choral ballad "Horatius" formed the second part. It was well rendered and sung with zest by the members of the Society. Mr. Jesse Timson conducted throughout and Mr. W. E. Taylor ably presided at the pianoforte.

Halifax.—The annual musical Festival was held on August 30, in the Spring Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. C. Haigh. The programme was executed by about 300 choristers and the hymns were accompanied by the Black Dyke Band, who also played several instrumental selections.

Hanley.—The North Staffordshire Festival choir meets twice every week, and satisfactory progress is being made with the various works.——The Meakin Concert Committee have experienced much difficulty in satisfying all applications for balcony season tickets. The programme for the first Concert has been issued, and can be favourably compared with any of its predecessors——Mr. F. A. Challinor, of Longton, presented his cantata "The New Eden," at Bethesda Chapel, Hanley, on the 17th ult. The excellent choir of the chapel, led by Mr. J. Garner, sang the various numbers in a commendable manner. The soloists were Mrs. Winkle, Miss Bridgett, Mrs. Johnson, and Messrs. T. Leigh, W. Mills, and T. Ralphs. ——The annual Festival of the Hanley Board Schools took place on the 21st and 22nd ult.

Honiton.—The twenty-eighth annual Festival in connection with the East Devon Choral Union was held on the 5th ult., at St. Michael's Church, under the conductorship of Mr. F. H. Gueritz, the honorary secretary. The following choirs took part in the service: Auliscombe, Colyford, Colyton and West Hill, Combe Raleigh, Gittisham, Honiton, Offwell, Ottery, Plymtree, Sheldon, Sidbury, Sidford, Sidmouth, and Talaton. The musical portions of the service were selected from the Festival Book for the current year of the Exeter Diocesan Association, and the setting of the Evening Canticles was by Mr. T. Roylands Smith. The accompaniments were played by a band of twelve instrumentalists.

Invercargill, New Zealand.—A meritorious performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given on July 31 in the theatre. The soloists were Mrs. Ross, Mrs. D. Blue, Miss Innes, Messrs. J. E. Taylor, W. D. Smith, E. B. Mackay, and G. H. Waymouth. The choruses were sung by about eighty voices. Miss Lithgow presided at the pianoforte and was assisted by an efficient band. Mr. Gray, who conducted, was presented at the close of the performance with a large photograph of the members of the Union.

Kincraig, Badenoch.—A successful Concert was given by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, under the patronage of the Marchioness of Zetland, on the 8th ult., at the Alvie Parish Hall. The singing of the Concert-givers was much appreciated, as were also the efforts of Miss Henschel, Miss Rowart, Mr. Walwyn, Miss Macarthur, and Mr. H. G. Bailey.

Leeds.—The College of Music commenced its third year on the 7th ult., when the new premises recently acquired by the school were opened. Mr. Louis Barnby, nephew and pupil of the late Sir Joseph Barnby, has been lately appointed secretary.

Newton Abbot.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. G. Bown, gave an attractive entertainment, on the 3rd ult., at the Newton Alexandra Hall. The programme consisted of a little play entitled "A Devon Pastoral," purposely written to introduce a number of the "Songs of the West" collected by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould. The principals taking part were Miss Gilpin, Mrs. Greenslade, Miss Churchill, Miss L. Hoskin, and Messrs. A. Mills, Heywood, F. Andrew, Harley, Luke, Mudsford, and Dr. Grimbly. Mr. A. R. Hutchison was the accompanist. During an interval in the evening Mr. Baring-Gould gave an interesting account of the manner in which he had taken down some of the songs from the old singing men.

Penzance.—Dr. Houston Colisson gave a much appreciated Organ Recital on the 8th ult., at St. Paul's Church. Dr. Colisson played an excellent selection of music, and several songs were contributed by Mr. Symons and Mr. Croft. The choir also sang two choruses.

Port Elizabeth, Africa.—The pupils of Mr. Percival Quarterman gave a successful Concert, on the 18th ult., in the Macintosh Hall. The programme consisted of several orchestral pieces, two violin solos, respectively played by Miss E. Biden and Miss M. Walsh; a song, contributed by Mr. D. W. Hook; a vocal quartet, entitled "Maiden, listen," by C. P. Adam; and Kücken's part-song "The Soldier's Love," the two last-named pieces being sung by members of the Orpheus Glee Party. During an interval Mr. Quarterman distributed the certificates to the successful candidates in the recent London College Examination.—On the 24th ult. Mr. Sims Reeves made his first appearance here at the Town Hall, and received an enthusiastic welcome from a crowded audience. Mrs. Sims Reeves also sang with success. The remainder of the programme included glees sung by the Orpheus Glee Party, and two overtures played by Mr. Quarterman's select orchestra. Mrs. Beresford played the pianoforte accompaniments.

Princetown.—The annual Choral Festival of St. Michael's was celebrated on August 26, under the conductorship of the organist, Mr. H. Brummell. Assistance was given by the choirs of Lydford and Postbridge.

Sculcoates.—An attractive Organ Recital was given on the 17th ult., in the Parish Church, by Dr. G. H. Smith. The programme included Mendelssohn's first Organ Sonata in F minor, the Andante from the same composer's Violin Concerto (the solo of which was played by Mr. T. B. Holmes, jun.), Bach's Fugue in D, and the vocal excerpts "Be thou faithful unto death," from "St. Paul," and "Waft her, Angels," from Handel's "Jephtha," the two last-named pieces being sung by Mr. M. Roberts.

Tenby.—The Choral Society, consisting of about seventy voices, conducted by Mrs. Catley, gave a meritorious performance, on the 8th ult., of Gaul's cantata "Joan of Arc." The soloists were Miss G. Drinkwater, Dr. B. Hamilton, and Mr. R. Williams. These vocalists also assisted in the second part of the programme, in which the choir sang "The Miller's Wooing" (Eaton Faning) and "The House that Jack built" (Caldicott).

Upton.—An Organ Recital, consisting entirely of works by English composers, was given in St. Stephen's Church, on the 7th ult., by Mr. Henry Riding. The writers selected were J. F. Barnett, Chipp, Maunder, Jackson, Hewlett, Dupuis, Wolstenholme, and Wareing; and variety was given to the programme by vocal numbers rendered by Mr. Richard Tate and Master Alonzo Thorogood.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. J. S. Buxton (Tenor), to Bangor Cathedral.—Mr. Charles Calver (Tenor), to St. Stephen's, South Dulwich.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. Percy W. Swale, Music-master to Philberds College, Maidenhead; also Organist and Choirmaster to the private Chapel.—Mr. Livesey Carrott, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Matthew's, Bayswater.—Mr. W. R. J. THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

THE TIMES.

This last work, which, since it is quite new, may be dealt with first, came almost as an agreeable surprise to those who have an acquaintance with what passes nowadays for "Church music"—that is, music largely composed of inane sentimentality and triteness. Nowhere in Mr. Blair's work is there any trace of the former vice, and only in the supplementary final chorus, intended to be sung when the work is performed in the concert-room, is there anything approaching to the commonplace. . . . Mr. Blair may deservedly be congratulated upon a composition of undeniable merit, which no doubt will frequently be heard in "quires and places where they sing."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This work, constructed on the old German model, is laid out for soprano solo and chorus, with hymns to be sung by the congregation. . . . The cantata will increase the respect in which Mr. Blair is held as a musician, and, let us hope, encourage the composer to aim yet higher on another occasion.

STANDARD.

The music is purely devotional in feeling—that is to say, in the chaste style of English Church composers. . . . Hymns are included, to be sung by the choir and congregation when the cantata is given in a church, but it is intimated that they may be excised in a concert-room performance. Mr. Hugh Blair has made an agreeable addition to service music in this unpretentious but musicianly work.

DAILY NEWS.

The music is for the most part in the English Church style, but the two solos—one a devotional air, "Sorrow not for those that sleep," and the other, a shorter solo with chorus—indicate that Mr. Blair has an abundant gift of melody; while his choral writing, though by no means abstruse or difficult for ordinary choirs, is undeniably effective. The appendix, intended for concert use, is partly fugal, and it is, perhaps, the best section of a wholly creditable piece of musical workmanship.

MORNING POST.

It is an eminently sound and musicianly work, expressive to no small degree within the limits the composer has sternly imposed on himself, and likely to be often used in the Church, for which it is destined. . . . Mr. Blair should prove a valuable recruit to Church music. He writes with sympathy for the voice both in solos and in choruses, and his scholarship is not obtrusive.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

No amateur association need be afraid that Mr. Blair has studded his composition with difficulties, because he happens to be a cathedral organist, and is versed in the production of older writers for the Church. . . . Mr. Blair's Advent cantata, by reason of its directness, conciseness, and generally-pleasing qualities, bids fair to be widely adopted by church choirs needing serviceable additions to their répertoire.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

This brief and unpretending work, designed specially for the season of Advent, comprises only six numbers, and occupies barely half-an-hour in performance. It serves, however, to exhibit the taste and scholarship of the composer in an extremely favourable light. The scoring is neat and effective, and the vocal writing, especially in the choral portions, uniformly graceful in character. There is, moreover, an element of sentiment about this little work which lifts it above the level of an academic exercise. Mr. Blair is not afraid to be simple, and yet he never deviates into downright platitudes.

ATHENÆUM.

A devotional and expressive little work, written for soprano solo and chorus, unpretentious, but by no means ineffective.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE

(LUX CHRISTI)

A SHORT ORATORIO

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY THE

REV. E. CAPEL-CURE

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

THE TIMES.

The oratorio, which is divided into sixteen numbers, including solos for all the principal voices and an orchestral prelude entitled "Meditation," occupies only the half of an ordinary evening's programme, and therefore has one attribute which makes for popularity. But it has many other besides. It is undeniably the work of a composer not only well cultivated and trained in his art, but also gifted in no small degree. . . . On a first hearing the most impressive pieces seemed to be the first chorus, "Seek Him," and that entitled "Light out of darkness." In both of them the handling of the orchestra is masterly, and in the former, and again in the short fugal number, "The wisdom of their wise men," the composer is seen at his best as a writer for chorus.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It seems to me absolutely a fact that Mr. Elgar is a composer with whom we shall all have to reckon. He is still a young man. His residence far from London keeps him outside the most vigorous musical life of the country, yet the work under notice bears the unmistakable stamp of distinction, and affords proof of exceptional resources. . . . Mr. Elgar's power in dealing with the orchestra is, for one thing, of extreme value, and we know that he can conjure up melodies from their lurking-places. . . . Much might be said in praise of details, but the "Light of Life" will be heard again, and afford another opportunity of discussing it. Enough now that the oratorio, while more valuable as a promise than as an achievement, is as an achievement that which makes promise well nigh as good as assurance.

STANDARD.

Mr. Elgar has not adopted any special style of composition, and he seems to be able to write fluently and freshly in any way he chooses. The vocal part-writing should be agreeable to the singers, and the orchestration is masterly without being too ambitious. In short, "The Light of Life" is a work of great merit.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His instrumentation is ingenious and picturesque, without being unduly intricate; his solos are extremely grateful to the interpreters, and his choral writing is fresh and spirited. These are great recommendations for a work of this description.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The young Malvern teacher has uncommon talent. . . . his sense of proportion and tone colour, and his knowledge of effect are quite exceptional, and albeit his themes are not always original, they impress in almost every case by their appropriateness of character and expressive force. . . . The best number in the work is the chorus "Light out of darkness," and this is of such excellence that I cannot help looking to Mr. Elgar for a really fine work when he comes across a "book" which appeals in every sense to his strong artistic temperament.

THE QUEEN.

His work excited considerable interest. Taken as a whole, we may, without flattery, say that the high anticipations formed were fully realised. . . . Mr. Elgar has set the libretto to music melodious in the extreme, and in which skilful orchestration is by far the most prominent feature.

EXERCISES
WEAKER FINGERS
BY
J. A. O'NEILL.

PREFACE.

It is an acknowledged fact that the chief obstacles to good execution and equality of touch lie in the weakness of the fourth and fifth fingers, and in a want of dexterity in passing the fourth finger over the thumb.

To overcome these difficulties the following Exercises have been specially designed. Their object is to place the weak fingers on a perfect equality with the others, thus entirely avoiding the defect of the general mechanical exercises, which, by allotting as much (or more) work to the naturally strong as to the naturally weak fingers, leave the relative inequality of strength and skill unaltered.

Experience has shown that a more marked improvement in technique is obtained by fifteen minutes' daily practice of the following Exercises for the weak fingers than by an hour's daily practice of ordinary finger-exercises. This additional facility of execution is noticeable after a short trial of ten days.

Part I. will be found quite suitable to students in the elementary stages, and whilst strengthening the weak fingers affords an excellent practice for transposition.

Part II. will greatly assist the performance of all scale and arpeggio passages, and tend to overcome the executional difficulties generally met with in advanced works.

Price One Shilling.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

Fifth and Sixth Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

†ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

A STUDY OF DEVELOPMENT

ENTITLED

MIND AND VOICE

Showing how to obtain Clearness, Power, and Maintenance of Voice without fatigue.

By J. BARNARD BAYLIS.

One Shilling and Sixpence. (American Edition, 75 cents.)

London and New York: Novello, Ewer and Co.

Extracts from Letters received by Mr. Baylis:—

Charles W. Pearce, Esq., Mus. D., Cantab., &c., writes: "It is a singular coincidence that your system of teaching by whispered vowels should first see the light at a time when the Virgil Practice Clavier is so much to the front, and I am inclined to think that what Mr. A. K. Virgil has accomplished for pianoforte technique may find some analogy in the exercises you propose for vocal students. The matter you have so carefully thought out for the benefit of all voice users cannot fail to be useful, inasmuch as all you attempt to do is to assist nature by enabling the mind to act upon and control the vocal apparatus."

Edmund Bligh, Esq., M.B., &c., Tooting Graveney, S.W., writes: "I am glad to attest the usefulness of the system I learned from you. I soon found it led to more voice, with less fatigue, both in speaking and singing. I have no doubt the habit of using the false chords economises the breath."

R. Graves Burton, Esq., M.D., Beaconsfield House, Hanwell, W., writes: "I feel sure you will have the support of the medical profession."

Charles Rokahr, Esq., 210, San Antonio Street, El Pasco, Texas, writes: "To say that I have improved is to put it mildly. I have improved wonderfully" (referring to results obtained from whispering exercises in "Mind and Voice").

Howard Scott, Esq., Chamber of London, Guildhall, E.C., writes: "The results of your tuition are astonishing. After some years of comparative loss of vocal power in public reciting, I now find myself equal to any effort required."

A. M. Richardson, Esq., M.A., Mus.B., Oxon., F.R.C.O., writes: "I am applying the principles you are teaching to my vocal work with much success, and I see apparently useless material becoming serviceable to art as the result."

Charles Lunn, Esq., writes: "I am very pleased to see how successful you are in carrying out the principles of the only school of voice as taught to me by Bosio's master, Cattaneo."

Lessons on the above Course of Study, with oral example for practice, quickly leads to results. Address (by letter), Mr. Baylis, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C. Appointments: 60, Berners Street, W.

MR.

EDWARD BRANSCOMBE

Begs to announce his return from his Australian Tour.

"ELIJAH."

Sydney Oratorio Festival.—"Mr. Edward Branscombe was excellently suited by the reflective character of the beautiful aria 'If with all your hearts,' and he delivered both the air and the hardly less tuneful recitative with exquisitely clear enunciation and sympathy for the music. The tenor also sang with dignity and care 'Then shall the righteous,' in which he produced a considerable volume of tone, easily filling the hall."—Sydney Morning Herald, July 15.

"Mr. Edward Branscombe's clear tenor tones in the part of Obadiah caused much applause to be bestowed upon him, and his artistic rendering of 'If with all your hearts,' and his remarkably clear enunciation, will not be forgotten by his many admirers."—Australian Star, July 15.

"THE SPECTRE'S BRIDE."

Sydney Oratorio Festival.—"In Mr. Edward Branscombe the audience were fortunate in hearing a cultured and beautiful singer whose study of the part renders him a more than commonly capable exponent of the trying tenor music of the cantata. The fact that his share takes the form of duets with the soprano throughout by no means diminishes its difficulty, and that he and Miss Thudichum were absolutely 'd'accord' throughout was abundantly evident. The exquisitely tuneful 'Now when the night,' where the tenor leads off with a long solo passage, showed his sweet voice to advantage, while in this, as also in 'Fair is the night,' both soprano and tenor gave a strikingly dramatic rendering of the dialogue between the lovers, he urging, 'Make haste, make haste, time quickly flies,' and his sweetheart pleading fearfully, 'One moment only let me rest.'"—Australian Evening News, July 17.

"MESSIAH."

Sydney Oratorio Festival.—"Mr. Branscombe, who was in excellent voice, gave reverential expression to the exquisitely tender Passion Music, singing, as is customary, the soprano recitative and aria 'But Thou didst not leave.' Though this was amongst his most appreciated work, yet all the solos intrusted to Mr. Branscombe were distinguished with admirable expression and refinement of vocal style. The tenor's rendering of the aria 'Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron' was unexpectedly well delivered."—Daily Telegraph, July 20.

"SAMSON."

Melbourne Oratorio Festival.—"Mr. Edward Branscombe had an eminently grateful task as Samson, and he may be cordially complimented on the style in which he went through with it. The air, 'Total eclipse,' was delivered with much pathos and expression, and in the florid declamatory solo, 'Why doth the God of Israel sleep?' he displayed both force and technique."—Melbourne Age, July 24.

Ballad Concerts, Adelaide.—"Mr. Edward Branscombe charmed the audience by his highly finished vocalisation. His first number, 'When the moon is brightly shining' (Molique), was given in a most charming and expressive style, his mezzo-voce ending being particularly pleasing. In response to an encore he presented the dainty little ballad, 'Come live with me and be my love.' Mr. Branscombe's second number, the popular 'Take a pair of sparkling eyes,' from Sullivan's 'Gondoliers,' was given with fascinating tenderness and expression, and in response to a triple recall he sang Moore's familiar ballad, 'Oft in the stilly night.'"—South Australian Register, June 1.

"Mr. Branscombe's refined tenor voice was most advantageously displayed in Newton's song, 'Ailsa mine,' and in 'Take a pair of sparkling eyes,' the latter for an encore. Later in the evening Mr. Branscombe gave Richardson's Scotch song, 'Mary,' which is, perhaps, the one by which he will be best remembered in Adelaide, so admirably is it adapted to his smooth and expressive voice, and so fine are the pianissimo effects with which he invests it. For a further encore the tenor gave an exquisite rendering of Blumenthal's 'Evening Song.'"—South Australian Register, August 10.

Ballad Concert, Sydney.—"Analysing the efforts of the members of the company, the artistic success of the evening was won by Mr. Branscombe. He sang with graceful expression, and his perfect phrasing and easy delivery command the highest praise. His rendering of 'Mary of Argyle' was a fine example of cultivated ballad-singing."—Sydney Morning Herald, June 30.

Ballad Concert, Brisbane.—"Of all the enchanting numbers probably none was more so than Mr. Branscombe's singing of Blumenthal's 'Evening Song.' The phrasing throughout was perfect, and the finish, in a delicate mezzo-voce, delightful. No sweeter tenor tones have been heard here for years. The applause was so pronounced that an encore could not be denied, and Mr. Branscombe repeated his admirable rendering of 'Ailsa mine.' Mr. Branscombe's other songs were the well-known 'Take a pair of sparkling eyes,' from 'The Gondoliers,' and the 'Clown's Song,' by Hatton. The latter was another example of delicate treatment, and the refrain from behind the stage enhanced it."—Brisbane Telegraph, July 10.

Mr. Branscombe took his audience completely captive. It would be difficult to imagine a more perfectly artistic use of the mezzo-voce than was made by Mr. Branscombe. The notes were perfectly produced and of marvellous sweetness and carrying power. The sentiment of the song was also expressed with refinement. The encore which it evoked was enthusiastic, and in response the singer repeated 'Ailsa mine.' In the second part of the prorgamme he gave Hatton's 'Clown's Song,' to which the other members of the company contributed from behind the stage a most effective and spirited chorus. The number was a very charming one, and it was deservedly warmly applauded."—Brisbane Courier, July 10.

MADAME MARIE HOOTON

(CONTRALTO)

Begs to announce her return from Australia.

PRESS NOTICES (Australian).

Burns Centenary Concert, Sydney.—"'Afton Water' meant the first appearance in Sydney of Miss Marie Hooton. She rendered the pretty and pathetic love song admirably, and received a ringing encore."—Sydney Daily Telegraph, July 21.

"Amongst the soloists Miss Marie Hooton, as an English singer making her début in Australia, claims first mention. Miss Hooton, who has a rich contralto voice which is evenly produced, made a decided success, being encored first for a well-phrased rendering of 'Afton Water,' to which she added 'Annie Laurie,' and again for a pathetic interpretation of 'John Anderson, my Jo.' Here Miss Hooton responded to the prolonged applause with 'Robin Adair.'"—Sydney Morning Herald, July 21.

Ballad Concert, Bendigo.—"Miss Marie Hooton's sweet contralto voice made 'Rory Darlin'' a song to be remembered. She gave as an encore 'The valley by the sea.' The ever popular 'Killarney' by the same singer fairly charmed the house, and the encore, 'Annie Laurie,' in no way helped to remove the charm."—Bendigo Independent, June 20.

Ballad Concert, Adelaide.—"One of the features of the Concert was the first and unfortunately final appearance in Adelaide of Miss Marie Hooton (Mrs. Branscombe), a contralto gifted with a fine voice, which she uses with much grace and expressive power, and adds a refined and winning style. This lady's first number was Adams's 'The valley by the sea,' the rendering of which was marked by all the arts of a cultured vocalist, while to the beautifully sympathetic quality of the lady's voice fine scope was given by the very effective writing. The latter remark applies also to her singing of 'Annie Laurie,' presented in response to persistent recalls, and for which there were manifestations of equal approval. Balfe's ever popular 'Killarney' was Miss Hooton's final song, and needless to say this was greatly appreciated by so 'popular' an audience."—South Australian Register, August 10.

"No choir-trainer need be ashamed to learn from that experienced musician, Mr. W. G. McNaught, whose 'Hints on Choir Training for Competitions' have just been issued as a little pamphlet, price 2d., by Messrs. Novello. Mr. McNaught's remarks are addressed more especially to conductors and choirs who are about to take part in the competitions at Kendal, Carlisle, and Morecambe this month, but they will be found equally serviceable by others; and it is astonishing to note how Mr. McNaught has succeeded in compressing into so small a space hints on almost every point of importance to choral conductors. The clear arrangement of paragraphs under the various headings, 'Tone—blend—attack—intonation—rhythm—pace—phrasing,' &c., adds to the value of the book."—Musical News, April 18, 1896.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
NOVEMBER 1, 1896.

AN EX-MUSICIAN'S REMINISCENCES.

The annals of music are full of notable instances of men who broke through the barriers which circumstance or parental will had interposed between them and the pursuit of that art. Schumann was destined for the law and spent dreary years drudging at jurisprudence; Berlioz's father intended him to be a doctor; Tschaïkowsky, again, was destined for an official career; while three other eminent modern Russian composers—Borodine, Rimsky-Korsakoff, and César Cui—have exhibited the peculiar spectacle of men attaining distinction in art while they simultaneously followed the callings of a professor of science, a naval officer, and an officer of engineers respectively. But while the case of men giving up (wholly or entirely) science and commerce for art is of frequent occurrence, one must not omit to observe that there is a reverse to the medal, and a rather curious reverse too—to wit, the occasional abandonment of music by her votaries for other careers. Perhaps the classical example is that of the famous astronomer Herschel and his sister. William Herschel, as some of our readers may need to be reminded, began life as an oboist in the band of the Hanoverian Guards, and after his arrival in England he kept himself alive by music for many years. He was an excellent violinist, trained the band of the Durham militia for Lord Darlington, taught music in Wakefield and Halifax, where he became organist, and on his removal to Bath in 1766, where he accepted the post of organist to the Octagon Chapel, for many years directed concerts and oratorios, composed church music, and gave lessons, until the liberality of George III. set him free to devote his energies to his astronomical researches. It is pleasant to know, however, that although music ceased to be his profession, it remained his favourite recreation, and according to the latest of his biographers the vivid enjoyment with which he presided over the gatherings of performers at his house is still traditionally remembered. His illustrious and devoted sister, Caroline, was also an accomplished musician, and enjoyed no slight reputation as a concert and oratorio singer; and it is said that at first she grudged the abandonment of music in order to be trained as an assistant-astronomer. To offer any vindication of this abandonment would be absurdly gratuitous. Sensible musicians will be well content with the reflection that the only rival which astronomy ever encountered in the affections of this famous pair was music. Somewhat similar sentiments are prompted by the genial "musical recollections" which the eminent Orientalist the Right Hon. F. Max-Müller has contributed to the October number of Cosmopolis. It will be no little surprise to many of those familiar with his works on Oriental literature and philology to read: "As long as I can remember I could play, and I was destined to become a musician, till I went to the University, and Mendelssohn advised me to keep to Greek and Latin."

As a matter of fact, when one looks into the professor's family history this inclination was natural enough, for Weber was his godfather—the name Max being due to the fact that the composer was then engaged upon "Der Freischütz"—while his own father, the distinguished poet Wilhelm Müller, is immortalised by his connection with Schubert, whose brief life coincided almost exactly with his own. Professor Max-Müller, then, started life in a musical atmosphere, for the reigning Duke of Anhalt-Dessau kept a first-rate orchestra, with Friedrich Schneider, who also presided over the local conservatorium, at the head of it. Schneider was a "character," a master of the art of ornamental objurgation, with a fiery nose and temper, who feared nobody—not even a prima donna—and young Max-Müller heard Paganini, Sontag, Spohr, and Mendelssohn at his concerts. Of Mendelssohn he has a number of most interesting reminiscences to relate. "Mendelssohn always excelled as an organ player," he writes, "and while at Dessau he played on the organ in the Grosse Kirche, chiefly extempore. I was standing by him, when he took me on his knees and asked me to play a chorale while he played the pedals. I see it all now as if it had been yesterday, and I felt convinced at that time that I too (anch' io) would be a musician." Later on, when Max-Müller was at school at Leipzig, he enjoyed special opportunities for observing Mendelssohn's magnanimity and love of a joke. Liszt came to visit Leipzig, and the musical critics who then ruled supreme in that city "were somewhat coy and reserved. . . . Mendelssohn only with his well-tempered heart, received him with open arms." At a Matinée Musicale which Mendelssohn gave in Liszt's honour, the latter played a set of variations on a Hungarian melody of incredible difficulty. The sequel is best told in Professor Max-Müller's words: "We stood amazed, and after everybody had paid his compliments to the hero of the day, some of Mendelssohn's friends gathered round him, and said: 'Ah, Felix, now we can pack. No one can do that; it is all over with us!' Mendelssohn smiled; and when Liszt came up to him asking him to play something, he laughed and said that he never played now; and this, to a certain extent, was true. . . . However, Liszt would take no refusal, and so at last little Mendelssohn, with his own charming playfulness, said: 'Well, I'll play, but you must promise me not to be angry?' And what did he play? He sat down and played first of all Liszt's Hungarian melody, and then one variation after another, so that no one but Liszt himself could have told the difference. We all trembled lest Liszt should be offended, for Mendelssohn could not keep himself from imitating Liszt's movements and raptures. However, Mendelssohn managed never to offend man, woman, or child. [This, we may parenthetically remark, was before the days of the New Criticism of the Saturday Review.] Liszt laughed and applauded, and admitted that no one, not he himself, could have performed such a bravura." In another place we find a good comment on the performances of Mendelssohn and other artists of the older school. "On listening to them, exquisite as their execution was, one thought far more of what they played than how they played." As a student at Berlin, young Max-Müller was a frequent visitor at the Hensels' house in the Leipziger Strasse, and heard many a private concert given in the large room looking out on the garden. "Mendelssohn played almost every instrument in the orchestra, and had generally to play the instrument which he was supposed to play worst. When he played the pianoforte, he was handicapped by being made to play with his arms crossed. . . . Boeckh, the great Greek scholar, lived in the same house, and Mendelssohn had received so good a classical education that he would hold his own when discussing the choruses of the 'Antigone' with the old master. He was, in fact, a man teres atque rotundus." Of Mendelssohn's engagement there is the following charming anecdote: "News had reached his friends that his heart had been won by a young lady of Frankfort; but nobody, not even his most intimate friends, knew for certain. However, one evening he had just returned from Frankfort and had to conduct one of the Gewandhaus concerts. The last piece was Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. I had sung in the chorus, and found myself on the orchestra when the concert was over, the room nearly empty, except his personal friends, who surrounded and teased him about his approaching engagement. His beaming face betrayed him, but he would say nothing to anybody, till at last he sat down and extemporised upon the pianoforte. And what was the theme of his fantasy? It was the passage of the chorus 'Wer ein schönes Weib errungen, mische seinen Jubel ein.' That was his confession to his friends, and then we all knew. And she was, indeed, 'ein schönes Weib' when she arrived at Leipzig. One thing only she lacked—she could not express all she felt. She was soon called the 'Goddess of silence,' by the side of her devoted husband, who never could be silent, but was always bubbling over like champagne in a small glass."

One more anecdote of Mendelssohn is particularly characteristic. At a Matinée Musicale at Bunsen's house, Mendelssohn was asked to play, and, inter alia, played the "Moonlight" Sonata. "All was silence and delight; no one moved, no one breathed aloud. Suddenly, in the middle of the Adagio, a stately dowager, sitting in the front row, was so carried away by the rhythm, rather than by anything else, of Beethoven's music, that she began to play with her fan, and accompanied the music by letting it open and shut with each bar. Everybody stared at her, but it took time before she perceived her atrocity, and at last allowed her fan to collapse. Mendelssohn in the meantime had kept perfectly quiet and played on, but when he could stand it no longer he simply went on playing the last bar in arpeggios, following the movements of her fan. When at last the fan stopped, he went on playing as if nothing had happened. . . . How different from another player who, when disturbed by some noise in the audience, got up in a rage and declared that either she or the talker must leave the room." That is true: Mendelssohn, unlike his modern detractors, was a magnanimous gentleman; indeed, his refinement and good manners are positively cast in his teeth as though it were essential to genius to behave like a truculent cad. We had marked many more passages in our ex-musician's genial recollections, but the foregoing may suffice. Though the fates ordained that the son of the author of the "Müllerlieder" should win fame as a man of letters and not as an artist or executant, it is pleasant to find that his admiration for music remains unimpaired; witness his eloquent peroration: "Is there not in music and music alone of all the arts, something that is not entirely of this earth. . . . Neither history nor evolution will help us to account for Schubert's 'Trockne Blumen.' Here, if anywhere, we see the golden stairs on which angels descend from heaven to earth, and whisper sweet sounds into the ears of those who have ears to hear."

BACH'S MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

The first biography of J. S. Bach was that written by J. N. Forkel, and published at Leipzig in 1802. Wesley proposed to prelude the publication of Bach's music in England by the issue of an English version of Forkel's book. The work was announced as early as 1808, but it was not published till 1820. No translator's name appears on the title-page, and Messrs. Boosey and Co., the original publishers, are unable to state whether it was translated by "Mr. Stephenson, the banker," or not.

Dr. Crotch, like Dr. Burney, became a Bachist, doubtless owing to Wesley's converting zeal. "Wesley," said Crotch, "you are perfectly right about that great man: he is unquestionably the first musician the world ever witnessed." In his published "Lectures" (1831), Crotch, who was Professor of Music in Oxford University, speaks of Bach's works as being unrivalled "for science and elevation of style . . . for the power of abstracting the mind from all surrounding objects, and so relieving it from care and sorrow itself. . . . Six of his Fugues are printed in three lines, with pedals for the organ. One from another work is on a subject resembling the beginning of a Psalm tune called St. Ann's." The pedal Fugues above referred to by Crotch are Bach's six great Organ Fugues, which were first published, at Vienna, early in the century—certainly before 1826. The learned editors of the Peters and Bach-Gesellschaft editions refer to this as the "Haslinger Edition"; but a copy in my possession shows that it was issued by Haslinger's predecessor, Steiner. The title reads:

Sechs Præludien | und | sechs Fugen | für Orgel oder Pianoforte mit Pedal | von | Johann Sebastian Bach | Wien, bei S. A. Steiner und Comp. No. 4085.

According to Dr. Gauntlett, Crotch was the first to play the "St. Ann's" Fugue in public in England. The occasion was one of his lectures at the Surrey Institution in 1816, when he played it on the pianoforte. It appears that Benjamin Jacob attended one of Crotch's lectures, when he was surprised to hear the lecturer repeat Burney's depreciatory opinion of Bach. Jacob then sent Crotch a copy of the "St. Ann's" Fugue, and at the next lecture he had the peculiar gratification of hearing it performed. Is it not probable that Jacob was the author of the designation "St. Ann's"? Gauntlett claimed to have been the first, concurrently with Samuel Sebastian Wesley (then a youth of seventeen), to have played the "St. Ann's" on the organ, when both he and Wesley competed for the appointment of organist at St. Stephen's Church, Coleman Street, October 17, 1827. An account of this competition is preserved in the columns of the Morning Post, and is as follows:

Musical.

On Wednesday the inhabitants of St. Stephen's, Coleman Street, were highly gratified with a fine display of organ performances by the various candidates for the situation of Organist of their Parish Church. The organ, built by Avery [in 1775], had undergone a thorough repair for the occasion; and is, in every respect, a beautiful instrument. Where many acquitted themselves well, it would seem invidious to particularise; but we cannot pass by the masterly execution of a magnificent Pedal Fugue, the composition of J. Seb. Bach, which was severally performed by Messrs. Gauntlett and S. Wesley, jun. . . . It was, in the opinion of Mr. Attwood, one of the Umpires, an extraordinary performance, and did the greatest credit to the talents and industry of these two gentlemen.

This competition had a most curious sequel. The three judges heard fifteen candidates, from whom they selected six (including Gauntlett and S. S. Wesley) as being qualified for the post. The usual poll of the parish followed, with the result that a Miss Bradfield obtained the largest number of votes and thereby secured the appointment, although she had not even been one of the fifteen competitors! *

The "St. Ann's" was played at St. James's Church, Bermondsey, April 23, 1829, in a somewhat novel manner—viz., by three performers on the organ. Two of the players sat at the ordinary keyboards, while the third played the pedal part on a separate manual at the side! The "St. Ann's" Fugue first appeared, printed on two staves, in Bach's "Clavierübung" (Part 3), published in 1739. The Prelude, however, is there separated from the Fugue, the former being at the beginning of the book, while the Fugue is at the end. But Forkel, on the authority of one of Bach's sons, expressly testifies to their connection one with the other. Benjamin Jacob, the Surrey Chapel organist, was probably the first to print the Prelude and Fugue together, in a publication which bears the following title:

A Grand Fugue, by John Sebastian Bach, in three movements, and on three subjects, the principal theme being the first four bars of St. Ann's Psalm Tune, arranged for Two Performers on the Organ or Piano Forte, . . . by B. Jacob. . . . London: Clementi and Co. [1827].

Jacob, however, does not print the whole of the Prelude. For what he calls the "Introduction," he takes the first thirty-two bars only, to which he adds four modulatory bars of his own (!), ending on the dominant chord. At the beginning of the Fugue, Jacob naïvely remarks:

This magnificent Fugue was originally composed for One Performer with an obligato Pedal Part—but as in that state the execution is very difficult (!), and in the absence of Pedals impracticable, the present arrangement as a Duet has been made to bring it into general use. It is now suitable for an Organ without Pedals, or for the Piano Forte.

T. signifies the Theme, or Subject, namely the first four Bars of St. Ann's Tune, this pervades all the three Movements—(2) Is the second Subject, which in the first Movement is a subordinate one—but in the second and third Movements the Subjects marked (2) are principal, and that marked T is subordinate—(2) Is the second Subject Inverted.

The knowledge of Bach's great organ works made slow progress in England. The handful of organists who cared for Bach subsisted upon the easiest of the "Forty-eight"; and in an early advertisement of Bach's compositions it is curious to find an announcement that "The above Works have no connexion with his 48 Preludes and Fugues." The skill of the players in those days was very limited. Jacob, who was considered to be a good performer, calls the "St. Ann's" Fugue "very difficult"; and in his organ "Voluntaries" he transposes the Fugue in E ("Forty-eight," II., 9) into F, adding, in a foot-note: "This masterly composition has been transposed from the key of four sharps, for the accommodation of the generality of performers." Moreover, the then existing G compass of the organ, to which English organists and organ-builders tenaciously clung, was fatal to the proper rendering of compositions written for C organs.

* I am indebted to Mr. F. H. Cozens, the present organist of the church, for this information.

Two events greatly furthered the cause of Bach's organ music in England. First, the introduction of the CC compass, which was largely due to the advocacy of Dr. Gauntlett. One of the earliest CC instruments was Hill's organ in St. Peter's, Cornhill. Secondly, the visits to London of Mendelssohn, whose zeal for Bach in the great Cantor's own country is so well known. In spite of much opposition Mendelssohn revived the "St. Matthew" Passion in Berlin, in 1829, exactly one hundred years after it had been produced at Leipzig. Bach suffered shameful neglect in Germany. It will hardly be credited that not a note of his music was heard at the famous Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts till Mendelssohn assumed the directorship in 1835.

An interesting reference to Mendelssohn's playing of Bach's organ music is contained in the following extract from a letter written by Dr. Gauntlett to Miss Elizabeth Mounsey, formerly organist of St. Peter's, Cornhill, who retains such pleasant recollections of Mendelssohn's organ performances there in 1840 and 1842. Gauntlett, writing on January 23, 1875, says:

> We knew the six Grand Fugues and the Exercises. But what Mendelssohn did was this: He brought out what Marx called the "not well-known" Pedal organ music. He was the first to play the G minor, the D major, the E major, and the short E minor, of which he gave a copy to Novello, who printed it with a note. And he taught us how to play the slow fugue, for Adams had played all fugues fast. I recollect Mendelssohn's saying: "Your organists think Bach did not write a slow fugue for the organ."

In 1832 Mendelssohn paid his second visit to London, when he was for a time the guest of Thomas Attwood—"dear old Mr. Attwood," as he affectionately called him—at his villa, Beulah Hill, Norwood.* One Sunday morning during Mendelssohn's visit, Attwood wrote the following hurried note to his friend, Vincent Novello, then residing at Frith Street, Soho:

"Sunday, May 27 [1832], 8 o'c.

"Dear Novello, — Mendelssohn has just rec$^{d.}$ some Manuscripts of Sebastian Bach, which he purposes trying this Morn$^{g.}$: hope you will meet him—11 o'c.

"Yours truly,

"Thos. Attwood."

The place of meeting was St. Paul's Cathedral, where Attwood was then organist. Here and elsewhere Mendelssohn played, from memory, his favourite Organ Fugue by Bach—the "little E minor." Novello also took a fancy to it, and asked Mendelssohn for a copy.

* A photograph of Attwood's house at Norwood, together with an account of Mendelssohn's visits there, will be found in "The Musical Haunts of London," by F. G. Edwards (J. Curwen and Sons).

In reply to this request Mendelssohn wrote to Novello (in English) as follows:

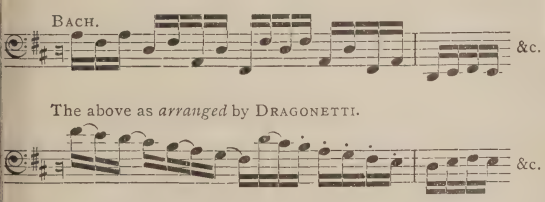
> As soon as I have a free moment, I will try to write for you the Fugue in E [minor]; but I cannot promise whether I shall succeed, as I fear I do not recollect exactly the distribution of parts in some passages. However, I will try it, and if I do not recollect it, get you a copy from Germany.

Novello did not receive the transcript from Mendelssohn till the following year (1833). He was then issuing his "Select Organ Pieces," and, as usual, was keenly eager for novelties. He lost no time in publishing the "little E minor," which Mendelssohn had procured for him in MS. After a good deal of research, I am able to state the interesting fact that this well-beloved Fugue of Bach's was first printed and published in England. To the house of Novello doth this honour belong.

The Prelude and Fugue is to be found in No. 42 of Novello's "Select Organ Pieces," which are still on sale. As it greatly differs from the other printed versions, students will enjoy making their own comparisons. At the beginning, Novello states: "From a MS. never before published"; and at the end: "For originality of subject, masterly treatment of it, refined taste, and pathetic expression, this exquisite Fugue has probably never been exceeded, even by Sebastian Bach himself.—V. N." A foot-note by Novello, at the end of the first page, is too interesting not to be quoted in full:

> For this extremely rare specimen of Sebastian Bach's extraordinary musical genius, the Editor is indebted to the obliging politeness of his kind friend Mendelssohn Bartholdy, who frequently played it to him, from memory, at the time when there was no copy of the manuscript to be obtained in England. During his visit to Germany this year (1833), Mr. Mendelssohn was so kind as to procure a copy, and very obligingly allowed a transcript of it to be made for the Editor of this work, who had so often expressed his admiration of the composition. The writer of the present note gladly avails himself of this opportunity of expressing his best acknowledgments to a gentleman whom he considers one of the greatest ornaments of the musical art in the present age, for this as well as for other gratifying proofs of his liberal and friendly sentiments towards him.

In 1836 Messrs. Coventry and Hollier began to issue Bach's Organ Fugues, with the following title:



> John Sebastian Bach's Grand Studies for the organ, consisting of Preludes, Fugues, Toccatas, and Fantasias never before published in this country. These Studies may be played on the Piano Forte by one or two performers.
> A separate part for the Double Bass, or Violoncello, arranged from the Pedale by Signor Dragonetti, is added to this edition.

These "Studies," which were reprints of foreign editions, are now included in Messrs. Novello's catalogue. It has been said that they were edited by Mendelssohn, but there is no evidence of this. Nos. 2 and 7 were, however, subsequently re-engraved (before they passed into Messrs. Novello's hands) with the suspicious superscription "arranged by Mendelssohn"; but whatever his faults, Mendelssohn was too great an artist to tamper with Bach.

One interesting feature of this edition is (on the authority of the Musical Library, April, 1836) that it was issued "at the expense and risk of Signor Dragonetti," the great double-bass player. The predilection of an Italian contrabassist for the music of Bach is not at first sight very apparent; but in this case it is more than probable that Dragonetti's "expense and risk" were not wholly disinterested. Dragonetti looked at these matchless productions of Bach's genius with the eyes of a virtuoso. He could see that the pedal part would furnish him with fine opportunities for the display of his great executive skill upon his huge instrument. Dragonetti frequently played the "Studies," as they were called, at the Classical Concerts and elsewhere, à duetto with the pianoforte, and always with great acceptance. The pianist played the manual portion, while "Old Dragonetti" double-bassed the pedal part. How the old fellow would revel in playing the great semiquaver Fugue in D!

The pedal part of these "Studies"—which is published separately—was specially arranged (or deranged) by Dragonetti, whereby the pedal passages were brought within the compass of his three-stringed double-bass, whose lowest note was G. This double-bass part is highly interesting in regard to Dragonetti's minute and original phrasing of Bach's pedal passages; it also furnishes some choice examples for the "History of musical tinkering," whenever that portly tome comes to be written. The following specimen of the phrasing and the "tinkering" is from the Fugue in D, bar 7 from the end (the notes in the second example sound an octave lower than they are written)—

Moscheles introduced two of Bach's Clavier works into England. At his Concert of May 11, 1836, he played the D minor Clavier Concerto; and at that in the following year (May 30, 1837) the Triple Concerto was performed by Thalberg, Benedict, and the Concert-giver. Moscheles favoured re-scoring and additional accompaniments. The Musical World records:

> The orchestral accompaniments [to the Triple Concerto] were re-scored for the occasion by Mr. Moscheles, and the wind instrument parts (the whole written in masterly keeping with the genius and character of the music) were entirely by Mr. Moscheles.

At the Birmingham Musical Festival, Bach's name first appeared in the programme of 1837, when the duet and chorus, "My Saviour Jesus now is taken," from the "St. Matthew" Passion, was sung. Tradition says that the performance was vile. "The duet from Bach's 'Passion,'" said the Birmingham Gazette, "is a laboured production, unvocal and unfit for the words; and the singers evidently felt it so." Mr. Andrew Deakin informs me that the inclusion of this Bach excerpt in the programme was due to the insistence of Mendelssohn, who conducted his "St. Paul" and who played the "St. Ann's" Fugue at this Festival. Writing to his mother shortly before the event, Mendelssohn said:

> Ask Fanny, dear mother, what she says to my intention of playing Bach's Organ Prelude in E flat major at Birmingham, and the Fugue at the end of the same book. I suspect she will disapprove of this, and yet I think I am right. I have an idea that this very Prelude will be peculiarly acceptable to the English, and you can play both Prelude and Fugue piano and pianissimo, and also bring out the full power of the organ. Faith! I can tell you it is no stupid composition.

The aristocratic Directors of the Ancient Concerts did not introduce any of Bach's music into their programmes until nearly ninety years after his death. However, they were well within their rule that "no music composed within the previous twenty years should be performed." At the Ancient Concert of April 25, 1838, Nos. 1, 2, and 11 of Bach's "Magnificat," "well scored by Mr. Kearns," were sung, upon the insistence of Lord Burghersh, the director of the evening. The production of a portion of the "Magnificat" appears to have produced "an immense sensation" amongst Lord Burghersh's brother directors, so much so that his Grace the Archbishop of York was induced "to adorn the programme of the seventh concert (May 23, 1838) with a Selection from the High Mass in B minor," for the first time in England. This "Selection from a Service," as the Mass was designated in the programme, consisted of the "Gloria," "Qui sedes," and "Quoniam tu solus." The performance, which seems to have been execrable, was somewhat after the manner of Haydn's "Farewell" Symphony. The Musical World thus records it:

> The chorus is accompanied, we believe, by three obligati trumpets, the alto tromba extending to E [D] in alt. This part of course Mr. Harper could not play, nor indeed could anybody, with the instrument now in use in our orchestras. The aria "Qui sedes" has an obligato accompaniment for the tenoroon or oboe d'amore, an instrument which extended below [sic] the Corno Inglese. This Mr. Grattan Cooke attempted on the common oboe, and of course stopped at the very outset of his exertions. The bass solo, "Quoniam tu solus," is accompanied by a corno [da caccia] and two fagotti. The passages for the horn were next to impracticable, and Mr. Denman was furnished with a fagotti part which appeared greatly incorrect. Of course the selection was slaughtered, the soli players retiring in dismay, and leaving Mr. Knyvett to play their parts on the organ, which he did most manfully, after the fashion of the men of the last generation, "Solo on the Cornet stop."

There were ample opportunities for becoming acquainted with Bach's music so far as its publication in England and the importation of foreign editions were concerned. Shortly after the issue of Coventry and Hollier's "Studies," another and more extended series of the organ works, edited by Gauntlett, was begun to be published in 1838 by Lonsdale. Its title is:

Choral and Instrumental Fugues of John Sebastian Bach, in continuation of his forty-eight preludes and fugues, arranged from his masses, litanies, oratorios, and exercises, and inscribed to George Gwilt, Esq., F.S.A., F.R.A.S., by Henry John Gauntlett.

This edition, which ran to fifty-four numbers, is folio in size, and nearly all the Fugues (including the great G minor) are printed on two staves, greatly to the sacrifice of clearness. This and Coventry's edition of the organ works both preceded that of Peters (edited by Griepenkerl), which was not commenced till 1844. The Press gave most appreciative reviews of the various Bach publications. Many of these are of great interest at this distance of time, and only the exigencies of space have prevented me from quoting some extracts. In one number of the Musical World (April 19, 1838), no less than thirty different publications of Bach's are reviewed! The style of the writer may be judged by two sentences: "Blessed was the thought, and ever-to-be-remembered the hour, when those good men MM. Breitkopf and Härtel determined to sell off their superabundant stock and lighten the groaning shelves of their ample warehouse! Then were brought to light the noble pedal Fugues which M. Marx has edited under the title J. S. Bach's Noch wenig bekannte Orgel Compositionen." In 1838 Lonsdale announced an edition of the six Motets, edited by W. H. Kearns, and the English text by Gauntlett; but the project was never carried out. In the same year the foreign edition of the great B minor Mass was also announced to be issued "by subscription," at the moderate price of twenty-four shillings for the full score. It may perhaps not be generally known that the B minor Mass was rehearsed by the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1840, but no performance of the work was ever given under its auspices.

Since the issue of the last instalment of this article, I have discovered an English-printed edition (oblong folio) of the "Forty-eight," but with a French title, which seems to have entirely escaped notice. The title-page reads:

Preludes et Fugues pour le Forte-Piano, dans tous les tons, tant majeurs que mineurs, par J. Seb. Bach, dediés Au Conservatoire de Musique, par l'Editeur. I. Partie, Contenant 12 Préludes et 12 Fugues. Pr. 8s. Londres, Imprimés par Broderip et Wilkinson, 13, Haymarket.

The London Directories show that Longman and Broderip were in business only between 1799 and 1808; therefore this London edition is really earlier than Wesley's. Part II. here appears as Part I. This, together with internal evidence, points to its being merely a reprint of Simrock's first edition (1800), which was dedicated to the Paris Conservatoire.

I am indebted to Mr. W. H. Cummings for kindly pointing out an error in the first instalment of this article (September issue, p. 585). Mr. Cummings says that Bach did not engrave the "Art of Fugue." My information was derived from the article "Bach," by Herr A. Maczewski, in the "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," i., 117*a*. F. FROM MY STUDY.

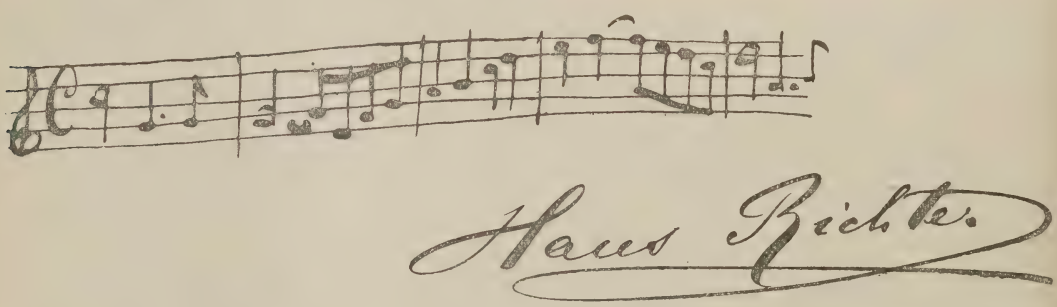
The hand-writing of two famous musicians is herewith displayed in fac-simile. Looking at it, the student of caligraphy would not associate either writer with the popinjay who came mincingly to Hotspur about his prisoners. The marks of strong, firm, resolute men are here, and we should say, even if we did not know, that both have forced their way to the front by unflinching endeavour. I may now state that this series of reproductions will close next month with the fac-simile signature of Charles Gounod and of all who were prominently associated with him in the production of "Redemption" at Birmingham in 1882.

A peculiar species of humour was considered "up to date" in the "thirties" and early "forties," and may now be read—necessarily with wonder; perhaps, with some contempt—in the third-rate literature of that departed time. The note of the age was levity; the most serious things were turned to ridicule for the amusement of a generation which had not forgotten the Regency, and still cherished the Regency's remarkable ideas of what constituted a smart fellow. Many of the comic writers of that era were not sufficiently sure of their witticisms to let them go forth unmarked. They resembled the schoolboy who, having done his utmost to limn a certain horned beast, thought it necessary to assist identification by writing, "This is a cow," underneath. Working to the same desirable end, these writers pointed their jokes with italics that the existence of a joke might not be overlooked. The plan, it is possible, served a useful purpose by stimulating mental exercise with a view to discover what plain Roman type would never have suggested.



The great movement in favour of musical education for the people which came in with the "forties" did not escape the attention of contemporary farceurs. They pounced upon it as, now-a-days, a Society journalist welcomes a fresh bit of scandal, and a survival of their efforts is before me in the shape of a brochure, entitled "Music for the Million, or Singing made Easy, by Dick Crotchet, Mus. Doc., and Member of the Philharmonic Society of Exeter Hall." The spontaneous and sparkling humour of the title-page prepares us for what lies beyond—that is to say, a very elementary book of instruction (?) illustrated by comic cuts and tempered, not by epigrams so much as by puns. I turn to Chapter I. "Music and singing," says the learned yet sprightly author, "are two sciences. The first is properly the science of (here the graphic illustrator supplies a fiddle and two D's. 'Fiddle-de-de!' we exclaim, and read on, avidly) and should be introduced with a bow and a scrape (here the figure of a road-scraper). The second is the science of bubble and squeak, or open-mouthed philosophy, and is now considered to be a babyhood illustrate the fact. We are, then, justified in tracing it to the first baby. Hence vocal is more ancient than instrumental music. The former appears when infants first get tongue, and the latter—i.e., the coral and bells, soon follow as the pretty dears get teeth. The first dog that bayed the moon; the first owl that screeched at it; the first Dutch nightingale that croaked in a fen, were roaring trade, and is consequently followed by all who can raise the wind to make the bellows (here a bull in doublet and hose, with wide-open mouth). Music is an art as well as a science, and, by virtue of it, in ancient times, men made the rocks more rocky; which are said to have danced an Irish jig from Athens to Corinth. While, in our modern times, it is taught to paupers, to make water-gruel palatable, and save salt. The origin of music is by no means obscure; the earliest squalls of some of the earliest vocalists. As time advanced, tea-kettles began to sing, and even before this period instrumental music began. In the first dry wheel that squeaked on an axle may be seen the earliest union of music and drawing. In the first humming-top may be traced the origin of humming, carried out with such great effect in the Hulla baloo system." Observe that our author does not italicise Hulla baloo. He is quite sure the point of that will not be missed.

Most undoubtedly a little of this goes a long way, but I must quote one or two of the remarks in which this mirth-moving author is most happy: "A semi-quaver rest has two crooks, and a demi-semiquaver three crooks. Thus music is to be learned by hook and by crook." "A major key is commonly called a sharp key; they are numerous in a merry key, where majors are as plentiful as blackberries." "The natural major key is 'I'll serve you out, you spalpeen.' The natural minor is 'Oh! pray sir, don't, I'll be a good boy another time.'" "A pause in music is marked thus (sign given) and shows the note may be longer at pleasure. As it is sometimes the case that young ladies pause much too long between their lessons, we add to this paws a claws that this is not the way to learn music." So Dr. Dick Crotchet prattles on, as content with himself and his humours as we are to leave both. There are pen-and-ink comedians now-a-days, but these are scarcely so child-like and bland as the writer of "Music for the Million." Some of them, indeed, are humorous without knowing it; whose objective is not mirth, but who provoke it all the same.

Dr. Johnson may be studied with advantage by critical men, and we are all critics more or less, in some fashion or other. "But," some may say, "the Fleet Street sage was by no means impeccable as a critic himself. How can the blind lead the blind?" True, but among the blind the one-eyed man is a king, and I think that Dr. Johnson had, at any rate, a single optic. Here is a weighty utterance: "The beauties of writing have been observed to be often such as cannot, in the present state of human knowledge, be evinced by evidence, or drawn out by demonstrations; they are, therefore, wholly subject to the imagination, and do not force their effects upon a mind pre-occupied by unfavourable sentiments, nor overcome the counter-action of a false principle, or of a stubborn partiality." This may be said of music with even greater force than of literature. You may, the Doctor goes on to assert, convince a man against his will, though the task is hard, but you cannot please him against his will. He emphasises the distinction thus: "Interest and passion will hold out long against the closest siege of diagrams and syllogisms, but they are absolutely impregnable to imagery and sentiment, and will for ever bid defiance to the most powerful strains of Virgil or Homer, though they may give way in time to the batteries of Euclid or Archimedes." It follows that in trusting to a critic we may be in danger from his vanity, negligence, or fallibility, but also from "a thousand extrinsic and accidental causes, from everything which can excite kindness or malevolence, veneration or contempt."

The Doctor declares, further, that critics, as well as the rest of mankind, are often misled by interest. He points to Dryden and Addison as examples; the one having written criticism only to recommend the work upon which he then happened to be engaged; the other having denied the expediency of "poetical justice" because his own Cato was condemned to perish in a good cause. One prejudice the sage deals with gently. It is that which, when criticism is written to gratify malignity, goes to the other extreme, "enforcing civility and decency, recommending to critics the proper diffidence of themselves and inculcating the veneration due to celebrated names." Here Johnson becomes himself an example, along with Dryden and Addison. As a critic he was neither diffident nor venerative, wherefore, though he does not repudiate those virtues, he proceeds to assail their possessors as either modest because they are timorous or lavish of praise because hoping to be repaid. Truly, the Doctor had only one eye.

Johnson would be tender to critics who, attacking no truth essential to human happiness, simply betray their own ignorance or dulness. "I should think it cruelty to crush an insect who had provoked me only by buzzing in my ear, and would not willingly interrupt the dream of harmless stupidity, or destroy the jest which makes its author laugh." Nevertheless, the man who writes becomes a general challenger and must look to have his glove picked up. But past authors and their works may be "gone for" without restraint or compunction. They are open to assault even from men who are only brave enough to kick a dead lion. But while proclaiming liberty of attack, he has a warning for the attacker. "The critic is, undoubtedly, at full liberty to exercise the strictest severity, since he endangers only his own fame, and, like Æneas, when he drew his sword in the infernal regions, encounters phantoms which cannot be wounded." After recalling the dictum of Addison that a true critic points out beauties rather than faults, the Doctor sums up thus: "But it is rather natural to a man of learning and genius to apply himself chiefly to the study of writers who have more beauties than faults to be displayed, for the duty of criticism is neither to depreciate nor dignify by partial representations, but to hold out the light of reason, whatever it may discover, and to promulgate the determinations of truth, whatever she may dictate." Ah me! who can attain unto these things? We are all miserable sinners, and have much need to be patient and forgiving one with another.

X.

RICHARD WAGNER'S METHODS.

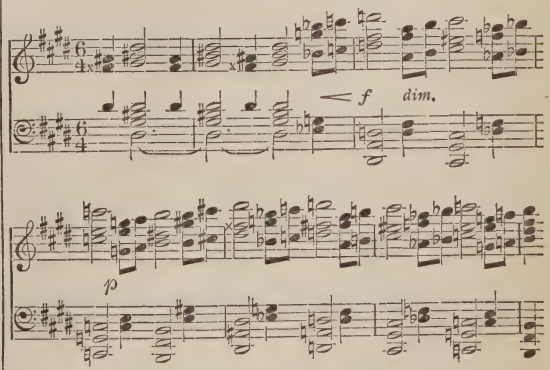
His Harmony.



At the time when Wagner commenced his career musicians were just waking up to the emotional value of unprepared discords. Harmony, up to the time of Beethoven's death, had been considered as a valuable means of expression, but one to be used with much restraint. I remember as a boy being much amused when my teachers (who, like all English musicians then, were about fifty years behind the times) implored me to only use the last inversion of the German sixth on very special occasions, as it was the ne plus ultra of harmonic resource. All the chords and progressions which had been considered exceptional became, in the hands of Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt, quite normal, and formed the most striking feature in the so-called Romantic movement. It was long, however, ere the public ear would acquiesce in these startling innovations—in fact, modern harmony is still caviare to the general. But it should be held in mind that no one man's genius caused the revolution in harmony that took place after the death of Beethoven. Abt Vogler was responsible for much, his pupils Weber and Meyerbeer for more, Chopin and Schumann for most; but it was a movement of the age, and Liszt and Wagner seized upon the new ideas with avidity.

Now Wagner began by being as clumsy in harmony as he was stiff in melody. In his earlier works may be found progressions—especially of concords, this being where the beginner always fails—little short of barbarous. But of course in dramatic music much may be permitted that in abstract music would be unpardonable. Boïto, Mascagni, and Bruneau even in the present day sometimes set our teeth on edge, but find apologists. Some of Wagner's early crudities occur from a genuine anxiety to avoid the commonplace and achieve dramatic strength; others, one must own, are the result of a not completely developed ear. In "The Fairies" occurs a typical specimen of the former case: it is where he is striving for a climax to his "popular number," the song with which Arindal re-animates his statue-bride. After avoiding a close in C major at the end of his melody, he goes on and modulates into A in this clumsy fashion—following this by a bar of common chord of E, one of B, one of F sharp, one of C sharp, one of G sharp, and then breaks off as the statue becomes alive. A bosom of flint could not stand it!

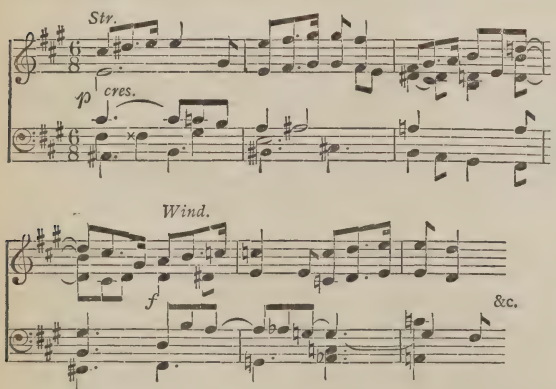
Here is another crudity which disfigures the melodious Introduction to Act II. of "Rienzi"—



One of the first things Wagner's intelligence showed him was the importance of continuity in dramatic music. Operas had hitherto been a collection of more or less interesting detached pieces; he was to revert to the procedure of Peri and Monteverde, the inventors of the music-drama, and to produce a declaimed drama accompanied by an unbroken stream of music. But how to make music which should appeal as such to the unlearned if the immortal landmarks of cadence and pause were foregone? This was a gigantic difficulty, which only he has ever satisfactorily solved.

Even my least technical readers will, on playing the following two progressions of chords on the pianoforte—recognise the fact that they almost invariably form the concluding harmonies of a tune, and that without these there is (for them, the untechnical) no tune worth calling one, only a portion of a tune. Recognition of this fact is the first step in musical composition, and the high-class composer does, in fact, deal far more largely with half-tunes than with whole tunes. And for this very reason an opera—a mere string of complete tunes—was regarded by composers as a puerile form of art when compared to a symphony, in which a few ideas are developed and built up into extended movements—a procedure seldom possible in dramatic work.

If we take even so modern a work as Gounod's "Faust" we shall find the number of emphatic cadences (accompanied by the above harmonies) very large indeed. And if we look through Wagner's works we shall find the most striking feature is the gradual and successful elimination of just those harmonies, until, on reaching the "Tristan" period, they have disappeared entirely. Even in "Lohengrin," which contains such a number of short complete tunes, the full cadences are remarkably few, mostly being avoided and bridged over with extraordinary ingenuity. But in "Tristan" we never even feel that they are avoided; the composer has at last conquered his difficulty entirely and the music has become perfectly elastic, so to speak. Thus the famous Prelude glides and melts along in this style—for 112 bars, in which are no less than 190 changes of harmony without one tonic common chord, hovering between A minor and C major without confirming either key, and by this very means attaining absolute continuity and a glowing, passionate, amorous character never before displayed in music.

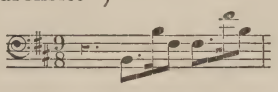
Wagner early recognised the immense dramatic power which harmony possesses. One instance in the "Flying Dutchman" must not be passed over; it is in the third Act, where the Norwegian sailors are carousing in port and challenge the unseen crew of the gloomy Dutch ship to join them. Their hail is followed by a dead silence and then a ghastly chord on three trombones. It is merely a common chord of F sharp minor, but the effect is blood-curdling; the discords preceding it sounding quite genial in comparison—

Again, what a beautiful point is that in the second Act of "Lohengrin" when the sinister duet in F sharp minor between Frederick and Ortrud is broken in upon by the appearance of Elsa at the window and a sudden modulation to B flat major is made. The contrast is made intense by the muted strings tremolo and low down giving place to sustained harmony high up on wind instruments. Another exquisite contrast in the same work is in Act III., after the nuptial chorus. As the voices die away on their phrase in B flat and the door closes, leaving the happy pair alone, the muted strings, long silent, steal sweetly in and change the key as remotely as possible—to E major—



"Lohengrin" abounds in splendid contrasts of tone-colour, each character being individualised by a particular instrument. In the later works many of the "leading motives" out of which the music is built up are melodic phrases of great power, but many others are powerful and novel harmonic progressions. Others again are mere rhythmic figures. This of course renders practicable many complex combinations. Thus, in the Trilogy, the motive of Erda, goddess of earth—the noble progression of chords on the brass given to Wotan the Wanderer—

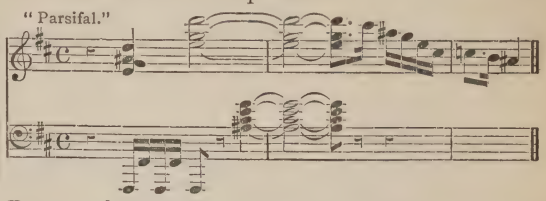
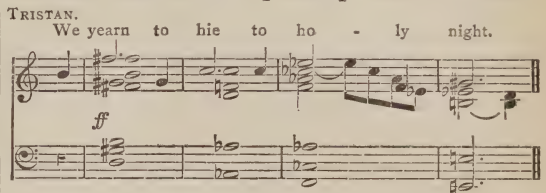
and the figure descriptive of riding (used in the "Walkürenritt")—



are all happily combined in the Prelude to Act III. of "Siegfried," where Odin rides down from heaven to consult Erda, and many similar examples might be quoted. Here are one or two of the striking progressions which the composer has turned to great dramatic account—



As Wagner sought for a perpetual increase in his powers of expression, it naturally came about that in his later works the harmony grew so extreme as to repel many really cultured ears. Chords of a harshness so intense that ordinary musicians dare not employ them at all became his ordinary language; such as, for instance, the chord of eleventh with the third (or chord of major seventh)— and the chord of thirteenth, with as many as six of its seven notes present—

Progressions of the strangest kind, too, are employed, not for special dramatic emphasis, but as the general texture of his music. It is only fair to say that many passages, like the Prelude to the third Act of "Parsifal" and the music of the change of scene in the same, which are absolutely appalling when played on the pianoforte, have an entirely different effect in the orchestra; but, personally, I have never been able to reconcile my ear to this passage in the great love-duet of "Tristan," especially when it follows the exquisite phrase in G flat—

As to the movement (usually omitted) in B major, where the voices sing this same phrase in parts—one dares not call it harmony—

If anyone can accept this as music it is hard to say what should be rejected. For surely the sentiment of the situation does not require such extreme methods as this? In Isolde's despairing outburst over her dead lover in the third Act a far greater intensity of feeling is portrayed by much less extravagant means. This passage has always appeared to me one of the most truly heartrending expressions of despair ever penned by Wagner—and with this exquisite specimen of his art, to which, despite its novelty, the most old-fashioned puritan could take no exception, I will conclude my slight survey of Richard Wagner's harmony. F. C.

The pronounced success of the recent series of Mr. Newman's Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall may be said to mark a distinct step in the popular appreciation of orchestral music of the highest class, and there can be no doubt but that the taste will become still more widespread by the continuance of these performances on Saturday evenings. It is always interesting to trace the influences which have produced a definite result in art, and the causes which have led to the present favour that orchestral music now enjoys are not difficult to discover. The first impetus may be said to have been given by the multiplication of amateur orchestral societies, which for many years past have steadily increased in efficiency and numbers. These bodies have been largely recruited from the numerous schools of music, which afford opportunities for tuition at low fees. Numbers of those pupils also at these institutions who have failed to attain a prominent professional position have drifted into theatre orchestras and the like, and have raised the standard of performance in a marked manner, thus indirectly contributing to the cultivation of better taste. Another important factor has been the long series of Orchestral Concerts given by Mr. Newman on Sunday afternoons at the Queen's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Randegger. These performances have undoubtedly helped to form audiences for the recent Promenade Concerts, and in measurable degree have enabled Symphonies to be introduced with success on popular nights. During the six weeks' season there have been played at these performances eight Symphonies, thirty-five Overtures, eight Concertos, and some 130 miscellaneous pieces, the majority of the last-named possessing great musical interest. That such programmes and their excellent renderings, under the talented direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, should have met with such widespread appreciation is genuine cause for satisfaction; and Mr. Newman, in securing the success of these Concerts, has rendered a service to the art which well deserves recognition.

The recently issued annual volume of the Musical Association, in common with the reports of the proceedings of preceding years, contains much that is suggestive of thought to all who interest themselves in the progress and development of musical art. Although the number of members has been largely increased of late, it is greatly to be desired that the benefits conferred by the Association should be still more widely recognised. The social half-hour previous to the reading of the papers at the monthly assemblies provides excellent opportunity for meeting fellow-workers in the art, and for introductions that are always useful and sometimes prove valuable. The discussions on the subject of the afternoon, although in most cases brief, are instructive, and often call forth remarks from some acknowledged authority on music. The value of the present volume is much increased by a paper from Sir John Stainer on a fifteenth century MS. book of vocal music in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. The clear explanation of the musica ficta and certain complex and peculiar methods of notation practised by our forefathers will doubtless be welcomed by many, as much as the presentation to the members of the musical illustrations which accompanied the paper. Another lecture of great antiquarian interest is "A brief survey of the dances popular in England during the eighteenth century," contributed by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods. All students and lovers of music may profit by the reading of Dr. Sawyer's discourse on "The tendencies of modern harmony," "The tendencies of the operatic stage in the nineteenth century," by Mr. Albert Visetti, and "Tendencies of form as shown in the most modern compositions," by Dr. Charles Maclean. Other papers dealing with "The treatment of music by novelists," by Mr. T. L. Southgate, and "The Bardi Coterie," by Mrs. J. M. E. Brownlow, contain much interesting matter. The attention given to examination of the present state of the art indicates healthy sympathy with modern progress, and speaks well for the vitality of the Association, and the volume testifies to the accomplishment of good work which well merits recognition and support.

The "highly interesting discovery" (as indeed it would have been) of a hitherto unknown composition by Richard Wagner, which has been so confidently announced in the Press, turns out, as was but too probable, to have been no such thing. The announcement, when first briefly made, raised a hope that it might refer to one of the three missing numbers of the music to Goethe's "Faust," for which drama Wagner, prior to "Rienzi," wrote nine numbers in all, six of which are preserved in the archives at Bayreuth. As a matter of fact, however, the "Second Concert-Overture," which Dr. Hegar, the well-known Zurich conductor, discovered in Wagner's handwriting, written on the back of the leaves of some orchestral parts of one of the master's known compositions, is none other than the one in G major, originally performed at Leipzig in 1832, and since at Bayreuth, in 1873, and again, in 1877, at Berlin.

On the other hand, a genuine find has just been made of two previously quite unknown compositions by Beethoven in the Library of the Teutonic Brotherhood, at Troppau. While examining one of the presses of the Institution, the librarian, brother Eugen, laid his hand upon the complete scores, in Beethoven's writing, of two marches, dedicated to the Archduke Anton Victor, grand master of the Order from 1804 to 1835. One of the marches was written in 1809, and the other in the following year, "am 31. des Sommermonats, 1810," in Baden, near Vienna. There can be no doubt whatever in the matter, the scores being autographs throughout and bearing the signature of Beethoven on the title-pages.

Beethoven's musical picture of the Battle of Vittoria was recently on exhibition at the Promenade Concerts. The great admiral, whose monument last month was the cynosure of all eyes, also had one, if not more, of his victories described in music. At the beginning of this century battle pictures were indeed by no means rare. A sonata was written entitled "The Battle of Trafalgar," sonata for the pianoforte descriptive of "that Glorious Event and Signal Victory atchieved (sic) by the revered Lord Viscount Nelson." The title-page informs us that the music was written by the author of the "Siege of Valenciennes," another sonata, from the title-page of which, however, the author modestly withholds his name. The "Trafalgar" Sonata consists of a series of short movements, the first of which depicts the rising sun. Nelson "cruising off Cadiz," judging from the music, must have been in happy vein; the author, while composing, was certainly as heedless of rules as the admiral, while fighting, of danger. Schubert, it has been said, could have even set an inn bill to music, and our author seems to have been nothing daunted by such an unpoetical superscription as "Sailors carying (sic) up their Hammocks." Two bars are devoted to the death of the Hero of Trafalgar; over them is written, "Lord Nelson shot." The consecutive fifths might be considered to have dramatic meaning, but for the unfortunate fact that the composer in other parts of the sonata shows that his technical training was far from strong. Beethoven's name, as stated above, is associated with that of Wellington; the name of another illustrious composer is also connected with that of Nelson. Haydn, on hearing of the news of the victory of Aboukir, is said to have introduced a trumpet-call of victory into the Benedictus of his Mass in D minor, hence called the "Nelson" Mass.

Richard Strauss's new, but still unpublished, symphonic poem, "Thus spake Zarathustra," was somewhat jocosely handled in what might, perhaps, fairly be regarded as a "guess programme," contained in a German paper, which, as far as translation would allow, was reproduced in the last issue of The Musical Times. That Herr Strauss has himself provoked "guessing" is apparent from the fact that, on being asked by Dr. Wüllner, who was the first to perform his "Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche"—viz., at a Gürzenich Concert at Cologne, on November 5, 1895—for a short explanatory programme of the poetical intent of this extraordinarily humorous work, the composer replied: "It is impossible for me to furnish a programme to 'Eulenspiegel'; were I to put into words the thoughts which its several incidents suggested to me, they would seldom suffice and might even give rise to offence. Let me leave it, therefore, to my hearers to 'crack the hard nut' which the Rogue has provided for them." Many guessers, who had both the story and the music of "Eulenspiegel" in their hands, came forward to try their skill, but probably no two guessed alike.

Until we have seen the music of Strauss's new work we have no intention of guessing at its poetic intent beyond surmising that its heading, "Thus spake Zarathustra," which he has adopted from Friedrich Nietzsche's prose-poem bearing the same title, and which has been explained to mean "Thus spake Nietzsche," might be taken by analogy as the equivalent of "Thus spake Strauss." We are, however, in the happy position of being able to furnish an English version of the preface to Herr Strauss's new work in advance of its publication. This consists of the first few opening sentences of Nietzsche's wondrous prose-poem "Also sprach Zarathustra." It runs as follows:—

When Zarathustra was thirty years old, he left his home and his country's lake, and went into the mountains. There, communing with his soul, he enjoyed his solitude, and did not tire of it for ten years. But at last his heart changed—one morning he rose with the dawn, stood before the Sun and addressed him in the following words:—

"Thou mighty Star! What were Thy happiness hadst Thou not those to whom Thou givest light? For ten years Thou camest to me here in this cavern: Thou wouldst have tired of Thy light and of Thy journey but for me, my eagle, and my serpent. But we waited for Thee every morning, took from Thine abundance, and blessed Thee for it!

"Look! I am weary of my wisdom, like the bee who has gathered too much honey; I need hands, which will distribute it.

"I desire to give away and to distribute, until the wise amongst mankind once more enjoy their folly, and the poor their riches.

"For that I must descend below: as Thou dost at even, when Thou disappearest behind the sea and takest light to those in the lower regions, Thou resplendent Star!

"I must, like Thee, descend, as men say, to those to whom I would go.

"So bless Thou me, Thou peaceful Eye, that can regard without envy a too great happiness! Bless the cup, which will overflow, that the water may flow golden from it, and carry everywhere the reflected splendour of Thy joy! Look! this cup desires to be emptied again, and Zarathustra desires to become man again!"

Thus began Zarathustra's down-going.

These lofty words, addressed by a Fire-worshipper to the Sun, call for a grandiose style of music. We await with impatience an opportunity of judging to what extent Herr Strauss has been inspired by them.

We have received a communication from the secretary of the Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, from which we learn with pleasure that the prosperity of the enterprise is much greater than many have thought. We are informed that the Society is not only "free from debt," but "financially prosperous"; and that among the artists engaged for the forthcoming season are Lady Hallé, Mesdames Albani, Palliser, and Fanny Davies, and Messrs. Joachim, Edward Lloyd, Eugene d'Albert, and L. Borwick. As the Gentlemen's Concerts rank among the oldest musical associations in the country, and are carried on for artistic and not commercial reasons, the satisfactory state of things here placed on record should gladden the hearts not only of music-lovers in the North of England, but of all to whom the welfare of the art is dear.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

At Accrington, on September 16, the "Hallelujah" Chorus was performed, by Mr. Berry, as a concertina solo!

When repairing the organ of St. Swithin's, Worcester, last month, one of Messrs. Nicholson and Co.'s workmen found a receipted bill dated 1796. From this document it appeared that Mr. G. Partridge worked, for three days and a half, at the same instrument a century ago, and charged one guinea per day; the charge for an extra man, two days and a half, being three shillings per day, while "glew at ctra" cost two shillings. Total outlay, £4 3s. If organs remained out of repair in 1796 it was not because of exorbitant demands for craftsmanship.

An American paper thus sums up the recent Festival in Worcester, Mass.:

A summary of the Festival includes as good orchestral playing as can be heard anywhere in the world, and some of the best solo singing; a first-class pianist; a rather better than average performance of "The Messiah"; probably as good a performance of "The Golden Legend" as has ever been given in this country; a rendering of the "Stabat Mater" that is hardly to be excelled in a lifetime; a mediocre performance of "Arminius"; and, to be personal, memories of Nordica, Williams, and Campanini that should neve fade.

According to another paper, the costume of Madame Nordica might be called, "in the vernacular of contemporary modiste poetics," a nocturne in dove colour and lemon yellow."

Statistics of the Festival at the English Worcester came out thus: gross receipts, £4,483 3s. 4d.; gross expenditure, £4,181 1s. 11d.; profit balance, £302 1s. 5d. The collections for the charity reached £848 4s. 10d.—a falling off from 1893 of £139 11s. 10d. The expenditure was £196 less, and the income £275 less, than three years ago. On the whole, the results are satisfactory.

Some of our American friends are particularly sensitive, not without reason, as regards the position of their vocal compatriots in oratorio. One writes to the American Art Journal:

During the German opera craze at the Metropolitan Opera House some years ago, the German singers had all of the oratorio engagements, and worse examples of oratorio singing could not well be imagined. By their training in the vociferous school of the German opera, they were entirely unfitted for the noble art of singing, and in no branch was their unfitness more clearly apparent than in oratorio. Since then there has been an influx of English singers who know how to sing, and the vitiated public taste has become somewhat purified. It has been possible to attend oratorio performances with the certainty of hearing good singing in the English language. Now we are once more threatened with an invasion of foreigners in this, our domain. We have the right to protest; indeed, it is our duty to do so. There are plenty of American singers with beautiful voices who know how to sing oratorio.

I quite agree, and the writer, and those who are upon his side, should seek to make the public share their feelings and opinions. The public only are to blame. Meanwhile they may find some consolation in the fact that good American singers have an excellent market in England, where they receive a hearty welcome and no voice is raised against them.

The cry of "America for the Americans" is just now popular among musical journals published in the States. Our esteemed contemporaries want to know why, if money is to be made out of music, Americans should not make it; and they especially complain that, whereas a foreign artist will sing for a certain sum in Europe, he demands, and obtains, much more on the other side of the Atlantic. The feeling expressed by the grumblers demands our sympathy; it is when we come to practical measures that difficulties appear.

American musical journals appear to recognise those difficulties, since of practical measures they say nothing. It might be possible for legislative action to "protect" the American musician as it already does the American manufacturer. A prohibitive impost, levied by the Customs at ports of landing, would, of course, prevent the alien artist from entering the country. The question is whether Congress would assent to such a measure, and, if it did, whether the people would permit it to become operative.

"Another way," as Mrs. Beeton says, is to persuade the public against countenancing foreign artists; and yet another, so to raise the qualifications of the native performer as that he shall command the market. These measures, however, are more easily pointed out than carried out, and the only plan with any hope in it is to appeal to patriotism; and even that, seeing how selfish we are in our pleasures, is far from a certain remedy.

With the cry of "America for the Americans" comes a sectional demand, "Cincinnati for the Cincinnatians." There is a musical union in that town, and the members thereof, viewing the approach of the May Festival, have arisen and sworn that no outside performer shall play in the orchestra. They regard him as an "unjustifiable importation, reflecting on their town as a musical centre." The result is that "the Orchestra Association must either engage an entire orchestra outside the pale of the union or give up their organisation and let the Cincinnati musicians drift back into the slovenly humdrum of their old jack life." Protection to native and local interests is a dangerous game, and there is no knowing where it will stop. I doubt whether even the Cincinnati situation is its ultimate reductio ad absurdum.

The Musical Courier tells the world that it keeps a deaf and dumb boy "who is at times sent to concerts the critics cannot listen to without the risk of incipient insanity." Happy boy! Happy critics to have such a considerate editor!

The Gloucester Choral Society enters upon a new season with £108 in hand. It is intended shortly to perform Dr. Parry's "Judith" and Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron."

According to the Newcastle Daily Chronicle, the Tyne-side city and district are highly favoured in the matter of orchestral ability. Referring to a successful Concert given by the Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society, the Chronicle says that the orchestra comprised every available instrumentalist of adequate skill, and continues: "We do not care what English province may be cited, but the band heard last night could not easily be excelled anywhere. It was composed exclusively of local musicians, who to technical skill added the rarer quality of enthusiasm, and who, being brilliantly led and admirably guided by Mr. Beers, performed splendidly." Fortunate Newcastle! Why not organise a festival, with a local orchestra? That would be a novelty indeed.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Norfolk and Norwich held their twenty-fifth Musical Festival during the first week in October, beginning on the 6th; ending on the 9th. The general arrangements and procedure were as on previous occasions, and I need not enlarge upon them; but it may be said here that the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, and the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) attended both Concerts on the 7th, that being the Prince's third visit since his marriage in 1864. Unfortunately the weather was most unfavourable, and little could be done in the way of a popular reception.

The programme can be sketched without taking up much space: Tuesday, "Jephtha"; Wednesday morning, "Rose of Sharon"; evening, new Violin Concerto in D minor (F. Cliffe), Grieg's Suite ("Peer Gynt"), Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," and Randegger's "Fridolin"; Thursday morning, "Elijah"; evening, Mancinelli's new operatic cantata "Hero and Leander"; Friday morning, Gounod's "Redemption"; evening, "Stanford's new ballad "Phaudrig Crohoore," German's Suite in D minor, "Leonora" Overture, and the third Act of "Lohengrin." That this was an excellent programme few will deny. It was so because not a piece in it occupies a place below festival rank. Elsewhere it has happened that the evening Concerts were given over to miscellaneous selections of pieces of all sorts and sizes. Norwich declined to follow suit, and was unquestionably right in doing so. It would be a good thing if the same course were adopted in all cases. In equipping the Festival with performers, the committee acted so as to obtain results perhaps better than the average. They provided an excellent orchestra, drawn, for the most part, from London, and having Mr. Betjemann as principal first violin. The chorus has never been a strong point at Norwich; not that its members lack skill or earnestness, but that the voices are neither rich nor sonorous. The reason why is too obscure for discussion here, but the fact is as unquestionable as, no doubt, it is unavoidable. Anyhow, while the Norwich chorus sang with spirit and correctness, it lacked quality and power. Much was done, nevertheless, upon which the members and their trainer, Dr. Hill, may deservedly be congratulated. This remark applies especially to the performance of certain works, among which, I am glad to say, were the choral novelties. For the vocal solos engagements were made with Mesdames Albani, Ella Russell, Izard, Fisk, and Sarah Berry; Messrs. Lloyd, Brophy, Ben Davies, Watkin Mills, Brockbank, and Andrew Black. These names speak for themselves.

Following a plan which has many advantages, I shall pass lightly over familiar works and their rendering, dwelling more largely upon others less known. Handel's "Jephtha" has, it may be, some pretentions to rank in the second category. Individual numbers are, I need scarcely say, exceedingly popular, but the oratorio as a whole is very rarely performed, although Arthur Sullivan, years ago, provided the "additional accompaniments" (for the inaugural performance of the "Novello Oratorio Concerts") without which Handelian masterpieces are now regarded as incomplete and negligible. Fate, to my mind, has dealt with "Jephtha" unfairly; also to my mind, the cause lies more in the story than in the music. The oratorio has a subject against which feeling revolts, while reason gladly questions its truth. It serves the musician well, no doubt, but that is not enough. We decline to have our nature harrowed that he may benefit by helping to inflict the pain. What view the Norwich public take on this point I am unable to say, knowing only that, for some reason or other, "Jephtha" drew the smallest audience of the week. The solos were sung by Miss Russell, Mrs. Fisk, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Watkin Mills in a manner which I need not dwell upon; the choruses were rendered with spirit as well as just expression, and Mr. Randegger conducted admirably. It was interesting again to hear the Sullivan accompaniments, and to note the skill and good taste displayed in them. How Handel would regard those additions, could he come to life again, is another matter, involving a doubt which we are not likely to see resolved.

Norwich has a sort of semi-parental interest in "The Rose of Sharon." The Festival was kind to that work at birth, assisted the parturition, and proclaimed the child a very fine bantling indeed. No wonder that it still watches the growth of "The Rose," and from time to time helps it on in a practical manner. Nothing better to this end could be devised than the performance now to be noted, and no work could more absolutely have commanded the fullest endeavour of the performers. With Madame Albani as the Sulamite, Mrs. Fisk as the utilitarian contralto with various small parts to play, Mr. Lloyd as the Beloved, and Mr. Andrew Black as Solomon, with the chorus in a mood of enthusiasm, and with an orchestra quietly obedient to the composer-conductor's will, the oratorio was fortunate in its interpreters and in the success of its re-hearing by the public who received it first. So far, Sir A. C. Mackenzie had every reason for satisfaction, and also with the signs and tokens that his work will live. Pity, indeed, if there were no such indications, for the music, in its beauty and masterfulness, cannot be neglected without reflecting severely upon public taste. The final number was followed by applause and compliments in profusion.

With acknowledgment of efficient performance, I pass the "Peer Gynt" music and "Blest Pair of Sirens" (the composer conducted this) to dwell for a moment upon Mr. Randegger's "Fridolin," a cantata brought out at the Birmingham Festival of 1873. The melodramatic subject, which, for all it is taken from Schiller, smacks rather strongly of the Adelphi, was put into cantata form by the late Madame Rudersdorff, who was clever enough for anything, and certainly for this. She did her work well, and, helped by the story, secured interest which is cumulative and contrasts which are great. On his part, Mr. Randegger provided forcible, picturesque, and melodically attractive music, which should continue to win a share of public favour, at any rate from those who do not limit their patronage to what happens to be the fashion of the moment. The selection of "Fridolin" was not a mere compliment to the conductor of the Festival. Its solos were entrusted to Miss Ella Russell, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Watkin Mills, at whose hands they obtained justice.

"Elijah" calls for no remark, nor, for that matter, does the "Redemption," which is scarcely less familiar. These standard works, so different in character, yet so acceptable to the public, commanded their usual large audience and the customary profound attention. They were, on the whole, well performed, blemishes appearing only at wide intervals. So with the known works in the final programme, and it will be understood that the selection from "Lohengrin" enabled Madame Albani and Mr. Lloyd to make a superb success.

I come now to the novelties, and, taking them in order of performance, first to Mr. Cliffe's new Violin Concerto, expressly composed for the Festival, and finished in the Engadine during the composer's September holiday. As a writer of violin concertos, Mr. Cliffe figured in the programme much as a "dark" horse in a race. He had never attempted anything of the kind before, and nobody could tell whether he would succeed or fail, though his success as a symphonist probably led many to await events in hope. The performance of the new work, played, as to its solo, by Mr. Tivadar Nachèz, and conducted by the composer, amply justified favourable expectations. Here we have a Concerto which, for all the evidence of inexperience it affords, and despite a measure of prolixity, abounds in elevated ideas, individual expression, and the distinction which marked Mr. Cliffe's works from the first. So much appeared amid more than the drawbacks that usually handicap a novelty. Mr. Nachèz, brilliant performer though he be, was nervous; the audience showed some signs of weariness during the long cadenza provided by the soloist, and, worst of all, the usual acknowledgment paid to composer and performer was forestalled by the Royalties, who, as soon as the last chord had sounded, rose to leave. The audience rose simultaneously, and attention which should have been given to Messrs. Cliffe and Nachèz at the moment was bestowed upon the illustrious ones. This was no fault of Royalty, which had to catch its train; but it proved most unfortunate as regards the Concerto and those responsible for it. Happily, Mr. Cliffe's music will soon be heard in a better atmosphere, and the Crystal Palace may make amends for St. Andrew's Hall.

I shall hardly be expected to enter minutely upon description or criticism of Mr. Mancinelli's "Hero and Leander," especially as something has already appeared in The Musical Times on the subject of that work. But it must be observed that the term "operatic cantata" raises some prima facie doubt. A dramatic cantata we all know as combining dramatic spirit and, to some extent, action with cantata form. An operatic cantata, in so far as it goes beyond this, must depart farther from cantata, with risk of a nondescript result. "Hero and Leander" exemplifies the fact. It is not a cantata, because operatic forms preponderate; it is not quite an opera, because regard has been paid, in some measure, to the exigencies of cantata. But as it is very much more opera than cantata, the proper home of the work is the lyric stage. Only there can it be judged under fair conditions; only there may its fullest opportunity of success be found. Of course this consideration does not interfere with the music, abstractedly considered. One need not wait for the production of the work at Covent Garden Theatre in order to admire the boundless resources of the composer's orchestration, or his boldness in using them. Independent of stage performance are, also, the effect of the picturesque choruses and the strenuous climax-loving strains of the duets. While, however, we can judge these things, a complete estimate of the operatic cantata in its concrete form is impossible where the extended choruses are not helped by the grand scenic effects of the story where the declamatory dialogues are unrelieved by dramatic action, and the passionate love duets are not emphasised by visible representation of the circumstances attendant upon them. For these reasons I hold comprehensive judgment upon "Hero and Leander" in suspense until the work is presented under the conditions for which both librettist and composer obviously provided. When that comes about I shall expect the success of the work, for all its mingled styles and its devices new and old. Madame Albani (Hero), Mr. Lloyd (Leander), and Mr. Watkin Mills (Archon) exerted themselves in the solos, singing superbly and unsparingly. Credit was earned, too, both by chorus and orchestra, while the public, not to be behind, applauded the composer-conductor with enthusiasm.

Dr. Stanford's setting of Le Fanu's ballad "Phaudrig Crohoore" makes no pretence to rival the earlier members of the series to which it belongs, and will not raise higher than it now stands the repute of him who wrote "The Revenge." But choral societies will take kindly to it all the same. The music, if not absolutely easy, is far from difficult; much of it shares the racy humour of the ballad, and those who rejoice in the pathetic will find many pages to their taste. Whether the subject will "enthuse" the English public may, however, be somewhat doubtful. The rollicking Irishman, who breaks heads at a fair and abducts his sweetheart at a pinch, has gone out of fashion as his countrymen have become more serious. He belongs to the same category as the comic characters of Dickens, and it would be hard to revive him even were another Lever to essay the task. However, here he is in the person of "Phaudrig Crohoore," mighty in battle, resistless in love; a vulgar reproduction of "Young Lochinvar," and, of course, a rebel, by the token that he shouldered a pike, and fell by a bullet, in the '98. The skill and effect with which Professor Stanford writes choral ballad-music need not be asserted here. Enough that the new example follows pretty much the old lines, and offers to our admiration features that are all more or less familiar. The Irish character of the music is so pronounced and sustained that the work will rank among things national, and as a further exploitation of materials very far indeed from the point of exhaustion. In its character as national I give it an extra welcome. Provided they be good, we cannot have too many of such things. The composer conducted a fairly good performance (which I hope soon to see bettered in London) and the work had courteous, if somewhat undecided reception. A Norwich audience, I should say, is generally undecided in presence of novelty.

Concluding my remarks, it is obligation to acknowledge the energetic services of Mr. Randegger, despite indisposition; and, as a matter personal to myself, the very great courtesy of the honorary secretary, Mr. Oddin Taylor, and other officials with whom my duties brought me into contact.

SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Welcome, Sheffield, into the ranks of Festival towns! The time is late, but better late than never; besides, how are we who judge from a distance to know what circumstances have kept the city from following the example set by Leeds more than twenty years ago? Let the fact suffice that Sheffield has now come into line and, unless appearances are more than commonly deceptive, means to stay there. I am told that performances in the nature of a Festival took place at various dates years ago, but these now belong to ancient history and concern the historian. It is more important to note that an impulse towards the present institution came, some time ago, from the numerous musical associations of the city, who organised and successfully carried out a trial performance of "Elijah." The matter was then taken up by influential people, and soon a Festival staff was appointed, with the Duke of Norfolk as president, the first conductor chosen being Sir Joseph Barnby, on whose death the post was accepted by Mr. August Manns. Resolved to start prudently, the committee limited the Festival of 1896 to two days, and devoted their programme exclusively to well-known works. They were wise in doing so. The conditions were untried, and it is better to err, if at all, on the side of caution than of rashness. In other respects a similar policy was adopted. The promoters would not stir without an adequate guarantee fund; they sanctioned only a moderately strong orchestra (sixty-three), and not only asked for, but obtained, a purely voluntary choir. Thus they made the initial venture perfectly safe and avoided the early disaster which is always doubly disastrous. It should be added that the Concerts were given in the Albert Hall—a building not too spacious, but acoustically good and having the advantage of a very fine organ. Something else was fine in relation to the Festival—the weather, whereat many rejoiced.

My task as critic is now very brief and simple. I have not to discuss a programme containing only "Elijah," the "Golden Legend," "Job," the "Faust" of Berlioz, and some favourite selections of a miscellaneous character. To do so would be indeed to plough a field over which the share has already passed. Nor need I tell how artists like Ella Russell, Medora Henson, Ada Crossley, Ben Davies, David Bispham, and Charles Santley acquitted themselves in such works. Excellence is taken for granted, and excellence was there, distinguishing all, but especially the veteran baritone, who sang the Prophet's music with astonishing vigour and success. He was Charles Santley almost rejuvenated. I enjoy equal liberty to abstain from description of the way in which an orchestra mainly composed of the Crystal Palace band justified its selection. "Then what are you going to speak about?" demands some surprised reader. My friend, you forget the chorus. That is the most fitting text for the few remarks I have to make—aye, and the most important text. A committee with money can easily obtain a good orchestra and solo vocalists, but a chorus is another matter. It must be, in the main, a local product, and if the locality cannot produce it, neither can it have a Festival. Some words, therefore, regarding this sine quâ non.

The Sheffield chorus, chosen after rigid test of voice and capacity, and trained with extraordinary care and skill by Dr. Coward, a local professor, consisted of 83 sopranos, 80 contraltos and altos, 73 tenors, and 76 basses—312 in all. It could not be called strong in a numerical sense, but the volume of full, rich tone it gave forth was astonishing; while so easily was the effect produced, even in fortissimo, that one felt a capacity for still greater sonority in reserve. The advantage of this must be obvious. The tone emitted without special effort is the best that the singer can give, and these Sheffield amateurs always appeared to be well within their means, singing with majesty and impressiveness beyond praise. I have heard no better sopranos and basses anywhere, and only on rare occasions have I met with the equals of the tenors and contraltos. But tone was only one of this choir's excellences. The members had been trained to the strict observance of every nuance; to proper and simultaneous utterance of words, with due regard to emphasis and expression, and to the attainment, where necessary, of dramatic effect. All this came out in "Elijah" and the "Golden Legend," to the delight and, in some measure, to the astonishment of at least one listener, who had not looked for anything so perfect at a first Festival. No wonder that the audience applauded the chorus as much as they did the principal singers, or that they said amongst themselves that veteran organisations elsewhere would have to look to their laurels.

I cannot speak to the second day's performance, duty calling me to Bristol; but I hear that there was no falling off, and that, under Mr. Manns's direction, all went well. Again, therefore, and with extra warmth, let Sheffield be welcomed into the the list of Festival towns. My thanks are due to the honorary secretary, Mr. J. Willoughby Firth, for much courteous attention.

BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

The ninth celebration (14th to 17th ult.) of this Festival marked a new departure in more senses than one. It had a new conductor in Mr. George Riseley (vice Sir Charles Hallé, deceased); it represented the united musical force of Bristol, instead of, as heretofore, a section; and it had a programme drawn up on lines not previously adopted as guides in that important task. The change of conductorship represented a distinct gain—indeed, a double gain. I will make no comparison between the ability of the late Sir Charles Hallé and that of his successor. It is not necessary to discuss the subject, since it now plainly appears that Mr. Riseley, long known as an able conductor, is not less able when confronting a Festival band and chorus than when in presence of any others. His power and skill were not revealed—only asserted under fresh conditions. Something, however, was made known—namely, Mr. Riseley's qualification to carry through with unalloyed success the enormous work devolving upon a Festival conductor. Some men break down under the strain, especially in temper and, therefore, in steady control of their forces. Mr. Riseley broke down in no respect, and was as genial and fresh at the end of his task as at the beginning. Obviously, therefore, the change from one conductor involved no loss. In the resultant consolidation of Bristol's musical strength it secured an immense gain. The once hostile ranks mingled peacefully together under the new chief, and the Festival authorities were able to put upon the orchestra a body of 500 voices. Long may the halcyon era thus begun continue to endure.

The programme seems to have been drawn up with two distinct objects in view: first, the proper one of encouraging native composers; second, the advancement of modern German music as represented by Wagner and Liszt. In promoting the first of these objects, the committee elected to perform a number of British works already more or less known—to wit, Walter Macfarren's "Othello" Overture; Dr. Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens" and "Job"; Sullivan's "In Memoriam" and "Golden Legend"; German's Suite in D minor; Hamish MacCunn's "Land of the Mountain and the Flood"; Prout's Organ Concerto in E flat; and Somervell's orchestral ballad "Helen of Kirkconnel." Of the composers named, Messrs. Macfarren, Parry, German, MacCunn, Prout, and Somervell were present to conduct each his own music. We must all accept these performances as a high compliment to British art, and a most useful one to boot. It has been urged that if the committee desired to encourage native talent, they should have commissioned new works from some of our younger composers. But proverbial wisdom cautions us against buying even a single pig in a poke, much more a whole litter, and I am not sure that the managers of a Festival are under any obligation to risk their important enterprise by undertaking such dealing, save in a very restricted way. Far greater service can be done to British art by giving renewed hearing to works of recent production. How often it happens that a composer puts his best powers into a work destined to be performed once and then ignored! It cannot, in many cases, be taken up elsewhere, because there, also, novelties are in hand, and thus compositions sink to the level of a daily paper, which, read for twelve hours, is then thrown aside for the next issue. This state of things may be remedied and the most fruitful encouragement given by following the example set at Bristol.

The committee's second object was not so praiseworthy, and this I say quite irrespective of any question as to the value of Wagner's music or that of Liszt. I gather from trustworthy sources of information that the committee were, to use a vulgarism, "nobbled" by some who contrived to do pretty much as they pleased with the programme, and even with the engagement of artists thought to be necessary to the success of the propaganda. The stroke was, I am told, attempted in a less ambitious form three years ago, but the then managers were less impressionable than their successors. To what extent the persons in question succeeded last month may be estimated by the following table showing the number of times in which the names of eminent foreign composers appeared in the programme: Handel, 2; Haydn, 1; Mendelssohn, 2; Beethoven, 2; Schumann, 1; Weber, 3; Brahms, 3; Gounod, 1; Liszt, 3; Wagner, 8; all other composers (British excluded), 15, and Mozart passed over entirely! I say that if this Festival is to be eclectic in spirit, and catholic in its sympathies, the disproportion I have pointed out must cease.

The performances were carried out with ample resources. Besides an excellent chorus of 500, there was an orchestra of more than 100, drawn from various sources and thoroughly efficient; while the list of principal vocalists included Madame Albani, Miss Malten, Miss Palisser, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Witting, Messrs. Lloyd, Ben Davies, Braxton Smith, Black, Worlock, Mills, Plunket Greene, and Bispham. With such a force anything might be done and much was actually achieved. It is easy to imagine that the performance of all the standard works came up to Festival mark, and that Wagnerian declamation was heard at its best in the solos of Miss Malten, on whose behalf, by the way, unusual demonstrations were organised. This statement includes, as to its first section, "The Messiah," "Elijah," two parts of the "Creation," "Job," the "German" Requiem, and "Golden Legend"; as to its second, liberal selections from the "Nibelungen Ring," "Tristan und Isolde," &c. Details are impossible, since, as in other cases this autumn, certain novelties demand attention.

The first new work presented was the "Requiem" which Gounod composed not long before his death, and it stands as his final contribution to art. It was hardly to be expected that an old and enfeebled man would transcend the productions of his vigorous years, and the most that could be hoped was that no material falling off would appear. It is probable that Gounod never intended the publication of a "Requiem," the composition of which he, with his peculiar temperament, may have regarded as an act of religious duty, or as fitting preparation for the change he knew could not be far off. Be this as it may, the work now belongs to the world, and will do service for years to come as an office for the dead, convenient in length, not difficult of execution, and, when properly performed, impressive in result. To say that it adds to our knowledge of the master would be misleading. In every number the old familiar method appears, and the well-known effects of former works are produced. It is superfluous, therefore, to enter upon details, or, if not, details can better be discussed when the "Requiem" is heard in London, as soon, no doubt, will be the case. The second novelty—a setting of Coleridge's "Hymn before Sunrise," for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra—is a work more of promise than actual performance. Obviously the composer, Mr. P. Napier Miles, can write well for chorus and orchestra in the manner of Dr. Parry, his sometime master, and there are passages in his treatment of the poem which suggest the precious quality of imagination. The piece, however, does not justify an estimate of what the composer can do on a wider scale. For that we must wait, not without hope. The remaining new work—Mr. J. L. Roeckel's "Siddartha," a "dramatic scene" for baritone solo and orchestra—deals with the abandonment by Siddartha of wife and throne that he might go into the wilderness and qualify as teacher and prophet. Mr. Roeckel's music can hardly be spoken of as equal to its elevated theme, but it contains many examples of happy fancy in treatment of the orchestra. The voice, unfortunately, is condemned to declamation, for the most part, but that is the fashion, and I cannot dispute it here. To sum up, Bristol opened the new régime in hopeful fashion. There were mistakes for future correction, and that is the worst that can be said.

Prior to the performance of "The Messiah," the council and members of the Western Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians entertained at breakfast the Festival committee, to whom they presented an address thanking them for encouraging British art by including in the Festival scheme eight compositions by Englishmen and inviting them to conduct their works. Mr. Riseley expressed the hope that in the near future they might have an English Festival—i.e., a programme made up entirely of works by native composers. Dr. Ebenezer Prout urged Bristol musical people to resuscitate the Monday Popular (Orchestral) Concerts, observing that the city possessed advantages which few places enjoyed and a conductor of exceptional ability. At the conclusion of the Festival the committee met and offered their thanks to Mr. Riseley for the enormous amount of energy he had displayed and the splendid manner in which he had directed the performances. In the evening the members of the choir were entertained at the Mansion House, where more congratulatory speeches were made.

THE HOVINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Seven Festivals have now been given in the pretty and, in a musical sense, thrice-fortunate village of Hovingham, but none has been more thoroughly successful than that which took place on September 23 and 24. The chorus was better than ever, and only wanted a trifle more restraint, and a better appreciation of the meaning of pianissimo, to be first-rate. No better proof of its excellence could be adduced than the fact that it sang Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" without a single slip. Indeed, this may be said to have touched the high-water mark of Hovingham choral performances, and was so good as to make one wish it had been nearer perfection in observance of the nicer nuances of expression. As regards the orchestral work, it may also be affirmed that a record was established, Sterndale Bennett's "Naiads" Overture being played with a perfection of finish, especially in the delicate string passages, that could not easily be exceeded. It was doubtless a coincidence, but both the novelties were by Cambridge musicians, a fact the less surprising, however, considering that the conductor, Canon Hudson, is also a Cambridge man. Of the two the more important was by Mr. Arthur Somervell, whose work was a setting for contralto solo, chorus, and orchestra, of stanzas from one of Mr. Robert Bridges' "Shorter Poems," entitled "Elegy on a Lady whom grief for the Death of her beloved killed." It is a subject that has proved well suited to Mr. Somervell, who has caught very happily the tender elegiac note in the verses. The second specially composed work was a dramatic scena, founded on Byron's "Vision of Belshazzar," for baritone solo and orchestra, by Dr. Alan Gray, whose "Legend of the Rock-Buoy Bell" was written for this same Festival a couple of years ago. The narrative is told to music that has something of the ballad spirit about it, local colour of a sufficiently Oriental kind being given in the orchestral writing. Both works were certainly well up to the average "festival novelty" level, and had the advantage of thoroughly adequate performances under their respective composers. Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, most ably played by Miss Nora Clench, a pupil of Dr. Joachim, and Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, of which a very fine rendering was given by Mr. Leonard Borwick, were among the more interesting things in the programmes of the three Concerts, the last of which was devoted to Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." The principal vocalists were Miss Clara Samuell, Mrs. Burrell, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Philip Lincey. Canon Hudson, who has now ripened, by the experience of seven Festivals, into a thoroughly efficient conductor, directed the performances, and to him, with Sir William Worsley, the generous provider of the Concert Hall, and Mr. E. S. Horton, the hard-working and good tempered honorary secretary, are thanks chiefly due for the conspicuous success of the event.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The Saturday Concerts, concerning the continuance of which such gloomy rumours have been afloat, opened bravely on the 3rd ult. before a very fair audience, who greeted Mr. Manns with great heartiness. The only novelty—a Violoncello Concerto by A. Klughardt—owed more to the fine execution of the soloist, Herr Julius Klengel, than to its intrinsic interest. It is neither amorphous nor diffuse, certainly, but its sound workmanship and conciseness hardly atone for the obviousness of its cantilena or the dryness of its working-out sections. Herr Klengel also played the familiar transcription of Godard's pretty Berceuse and a bustling Tarantella of his own, distinguishing himself alike in the cantabile and bravura styles. The band rendered full justice to Sterndale Bennett's "Naiads" and the "Freischütz" Overtures, and to Beethoven's C minor Symphony; and Mr. Barton McGuckin, in the "Werbelieder" and "Preislied," from the "Meistersinger," earned cordial recognition for his conscientious and intelligent singing.

At the second Concert, held on the 10th ult., a most engaging and attractive ballet suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff, entitled "Mlada," formed the most important novelty. The four numbers are all brimful of life and colour, of piquant rhythms and brilliant instrumentation. A favourable reception was also extended to Mr. Walter Macfarren's "Othello" Overture, which, if it cannot be said to reflect the passion and tragedy of Shakespeare's drama, is a thoroughly well-made and musicianly piece of work. Miss Brema gave a very impressive rendering of Purcell's extraordinarily original and striking scena "Mad Bess," which has been scored for orchestra with consummate skill by Professor Stanford, and distinguished herself equally in Schubert's "Doppelgänger." The accompanying of the band left a good deal to be desired in Purcell's scena, but its performance of Schumann's Fourth Symphony was worthy of its reputation. Miss Muriel Elliot, a pupil of Herr Stavenhagen, displayed a finished technique in Beethoven's E flat Concerto and solos by Liszt and Paderewski, though her touch is somewhat hard and her style lacking in sympathy.

On the 17th ult. the presence of Señor Sarasate—his only appearance with orchestra this season—attracted a splendid audience, every seat having been sold out before the commencement of the Concert. For his chief solo he chose Mendelssohn's Concerto, which he played with the exquisite delicacy and urbanity of style and purity of intonation in which he is unrivalled. The last movement was taken, after his wont, au grand galop, but without conveying an impression of effort. Later on he gave one of his own characteristic Spanish pieces with all his old brilliancy, adding the transcription of Chopin's E flat Nocturne as an encore. The Symphony was Tschaïkowsky's wonderful "Pathétique," given with plenty of spirit and entrain under Mr. Manns's direction, and an orchestral novelty was forthcoming in the Symphonic Prelude entitled "Amboss oder Hammer," founded on Goethe's "Kophtisches Lied," from the vigorous pen of Mr. William Wallace. The favourable impression created by the earlier works of Mr. Wallace heard at these Concerts was maintained by his new effort, which is at once ingenious and forcible. Miss Florence Christie sang an aria, "Alcestis," by Mr. Reginald Steggall, already heard at one of the Pupils' Concerts of the Royal Academy, which cannot be said to possess any striking individuality, and Secchi's aria, "Lungi dal caro bene."

COLONNE CONCERTS.

On April 13 last, at Queen's Hall, the famous Lamoureux Orchestra made its first appearance in England, and six months later (i.e., on the 12th ult.), in the same building, M. Colonne and his band inaugurated their first English season. Truly, of all music-lovers, the London concert-goer is most favoured. He has now not only an abundance of Orchestral Concerts, ably conducted by his own countrymen, but Richter and Mottl seek his favour at frequent intervals. His opportunities for comparison are, in short, unique, and this means the enjoyment of the best of all educational methods. Signs are not wanting that he is profiting by the course, and there is good reason for the esteem with which foreign artists regard success in London concert-rooms. M. Colonne's forces consist of 103 instrumentalists, who have been trained by their talented conductor to a high degree of excellence, which is chiefly apparent in their interpretations of French music, and most notably in passages calling for dramatic treatment. The programme of the first Concert was opened by Weber's "Jubilee" Overture, a work presumably chosen on account of its inclusion of the melody of our National Anthem—a delicate compliment worthy of a Frenchman. Neither in the rendering of this nor in that of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony did the orchestra make a particularly favourable impression, but the next two pieces, the Berceuse from B. Godard's four-act opera "Jocelyn" and the fourth number from D. Charpentier's Suite for orchestra, "Impressions of Italy," showed the players to greater advantage, and revealed one of their number, M. Baretti, to be an accomplished solo violoncellist. Selections from Massenet's sacred opera "Herodiade," produced in Brussels in December, 1881, and from Berlioz's "Faust" were finely rendered, the finished singing of Mdlle. Marcella Pregi and the viola and cor anglais playing of M. Monteux and M. Longy respectively being specially noteworthy. M.

Colonne made his most pronounced success at the second Concert, on the following Wednesday, in a performance of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," a finer interpretation of which has never been heard in the metropolis. Except for the first performance in England of a Pianoforte Concerto in F by Edward Schütt, which proved a brilliantly written work, to the solo part of which full justice was done by Mr. Mark Hambourg, the remainder of the programme was ill-advised, consisting of detached movements and a quite unnecessary arrangement for strings of Schumann's delightful little pianoforte pieces "Scenes of Childhood." The excerpts were "Sous les Tilleuls," from Massenet's "Scènes Alsaciennes," the final portion of the first part of César Franck's symphonic poem "Psyché," and the seventh and eleventh numbers from the third act of Saint-Saëns's opera "Ascanio." When M. Colonne next pays us a visit we hope he will perform César Franck's work in its entirety. The third Concert, on the 16th ult., began with a vivacious rendering of Bizet's picturesque and romantic orchestral suite "Roma," and was chiefly remarkable for the fine singing of M. Vergnet in "Le repos de la Sainte Famille," from Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ," and in excerpts from the second part of Saint-Saëns's sacred opera "Samson et Delila." Mrs. Katharine Fisk was also heard in some of the well-known solo portions of this work, and took part with M. Vergnet in the duet. The rich tone of Mrs. Fisk's voice was peculiarly suitable to the character of the music of her part, and her reading testified to conscientious study of the dramatic nature of the work. The tempo adopted in the duet was, however, so slow and languorous that the effect was more suggestive of a sorrowful farewell than an impassioned interview. M. Marix Loevensohn rendered the solo part of Saint-Saëns's Concerto for violoncello and orchestra with skill and taste, but the poor tone of his instrument marred his playing. Other pieces were a well-written movement entitled "La Nuit et l'Amour," which forms the opening to the second portion of the symphonic ode "Ludus pro Patria," by Augusta Holmés; the Pas du Voile and Scherzo from Chaminade's "Ballet Symphonique," "Callirhoë," and the "Ride of the Valkyries," the two first-named being excellently played. The principal work at the final Concert, which took place on the afternoon of the 17th ult., was Beethoven's popular Symphony in C minor. This received a highly-finished interpretation, and one that was interesting to musicians as illustrative of the different points of view from which masterpieces may be regarded. Three movements from Bach's Third Suite in B minor served to advantageously display the skill of M. Balleron as a flautist, and Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat provided a like opportunity for the brilliant technique and abilities of Mr. Frederick Dawson. The performance of Berlioz's arrangement of the Hungarian "Rackoczy" March created the utmost enthusiasm. The Prelude to "Parsifal" was beautifully played, and all justice rendered to Gounod's "Hymne à St. Cécile" and a Sérénade Illyrienne and Aubade from Widor's incidental music to Dorchain's comedy "Conte d'Avril." The series was closed by a selection from the ballet music of Saint-Saëns's opera "Henry VIII." From the above it will be seen that the programmes were not well suited to English audiences, who prefer works in their entirety, and would have been more attracted by unknown compositions of French composers, of whose writings they are only now beginning to take favourable cognizance. It should be added that the analytical programmes were written by Mr. E. F. Jacques.

RICHTER CONCERT.

The first of Dr. Richter's autumn series of Orchestral Concerts took place on the 20th ult., when the renowned conductor directed his fine orchestra for the first time in the Queen's Hall. The programme was deprived of much of its attractiveness by the withdrawal, for purposes of revision, of Dvorák's new symphonic works; but some amends were made for the omission by the inclusion of this composer's piquant "Scherzo Capriccioso," which was most effectively rendered. A very fine interpretation was given of Liszt's third Symphonic Poem, "Les Préludes," and the beautiful introduction to the third Act of "Die Meistersinger." It is unnecessary to comment on the renderings of Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, the "Siegfried Idyll," or the "Huldigungs Marsch." It is sufficient to say that the interpretations they received once more showed Dr. Richter and his orchestra to be unsurpassed.

QUEEN'S HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The high-class character of the nightly Orchestral Concerts, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood, at the Queen's Hall, was fully maintained until the close of the season on the 10th ult. The commendable policy of introducing music of the highest design and expression on "popular" nights was pursued with marked success, and the absence of movement in the promenade and the attention with which symphonies and concertos were followed by large audiences, were a striking testimony of the widespread capacity which now exists to enjoy the best in the art. Amongst the novelties produced may be mentioned: "Scènes de Ballet" (Op. 52) by Glazounoff and a "Capriccio Espagnol" (Op. 34) by Rimsky-Korsakoff, both played on September 24. The former contains a remarkably clever and characteristic "Danse Orientale" and the latter is a brilliant example of what is known as the gipsy style. On September 26 the first performance was given of a Ballade for orchestra, entitled "Mazeppa," by Mr. T. H. Frewin, whose name was already favourably known at these Concerts by an Overture, "The Battle of Flowers," produced last year. Since then Mr. Frewin has made good progress in power of expression, and his "Mazeppa" possesses many meritorious qualities. On the 1st ult. was played, for the first time in England, Massenet's Overture to "Le Cid," an opera based on Corneille's drama of that name, and produced in Paris in 1886. Two evenings later a "Rhapsodie Mauresque" and a March from the same work were introduced. This music met with much acceptance, and is more masculine in character than many of the composer's later productions. Much interest was attached to three orchestral pieces for string orchestra by Grieg, which were heard on the 6th ult. They consisted of a transcription of a melody in F, by F. Due, and versions of two of the composer's set of twenty-five pianoforte pieces, entitled "Nordische Tänze und Folksweisen," all of them proving attractive examples of this master's style. Three novelties were introduced on the 8th ult. A "Rhapsodie Espagnole" by Léon Itasse, a French composer of merit, a Symphony in E minor by Alberto Franchetti, and some new incidental music, by John E. West, to Longfellow's poem "King Robert of Sicily." The Symphony is an early work of the composer, who subsequently became widely known by his operas "Asrael," "Cristoforo Colombo," and "Fior d'Alpe." It is very pleasing music, possesses much vivacity, and shows great perception of orchestral effects. Mr. West's music to Longfellow's poem is remarkable for its aptness to and sympathy with the lines it illustrates. The opening theme is admirably expressive of the pride of the king, and the arrival of the ambassadors is no less happily suggested by a brief march. A modification of the seventh Gregorian tone is used for the chant of the monks, and the angel is provided with a theme of considerable beauty. The music is cleverly scored for orchestra and organ, and it increased in a marked manner the impressiveness of Mr. Charles Fry's delivery of the dramatic poem. The work may be recommended to the attention of amateur orchestral societies, in whose concert programmes it would form an attractive feature. The following evening M. Wiegand, the renowned City organist of Sydney, Australia, played Mendelssohn's Sixth Organ Sonata in D minor and Bach's fine Toccata and Fugue in the same key, his performance of both works being remarkable for clearness of execution and effective use of the various stops. On the last night of the series the first performance was given of a dainty Minuet in A, by Paderewski, much of the charm of which is due to the delicate scoring by Ernest Ford. On this occasion the orchestra was again increased and numbered 103 instrumentalists. Since then the Concerts have been continued on Saturday evenings with great success. On the 17th ult. was given the first performance in England of Tschaïkowsky's Suite (Op. 71*a*), from the ballet "The Nutcracker." This Suite consists of a miniature overture (in which no use is made of violoncellos or double-basses), a march, and six dances. Several of the last-named are grotesque in character and are scored in a most bizarre manner; but all are distinguished by that keen sense of tonal colour which is so striking a characteristic of this composer's productions. It is intended to produce a novelty and a work by an English composer at each of these Saturday Concerts, which are to be continued throughout the winter, and to engage solo vocalists and instrumental artists of equal renown to those who have appeared at the nightly performances.

MESSRS. WALENN'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Messrs. Walenn began, on the 20th ult., in the Queen's (Small) Hall, a series of Chamber Concerts with a Trio in B minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Dr. Hubert Parry, which, although written in 1884, has not yet been published, and until this occasion had not been performed in a London Concert-room. This neglect is the more remarkable as the work is most attractive. It opens with a short and admirably-conceived Maestoso. This serves as a most effective introduction to an Allegro con fuoco, which is built upon admirably-contrasted themes and developed in a masterly and vigorous manner. It is followed by a slow movement of great melodic beauty, which, in turn, gives place to a vivacious Allegretto containing an expressive trio. The melody of this is introduced into the Maestoso, which precedes a cleverly-written Finale. The work was excellently interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Gerald Walenn, and Mr. Herbert Walenn, and was warmly received by a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Herbert Walenn with much skill played for the first time in London an effective Tema con variazioni for violoncello with pianoforte accompaniment, by Hugo Becker, and Mr. Arthur Walenn sang with musician-like taste a high-class selection of songs, which included a new and artistic setting, by R. H. Walthew, of E. A. Poe's poem "Eldorado." Delightfully finished performances were given by Miss Fanny Davies of three of Chopin's Pianoforte Studies, respectively in F minor, C sharp minor, and G flat; and Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in G concluded an interesting programme.

MESSRS. DELAFOSSE AND YSAYE'S PIANOFORTE AND VIOLIN RECITAL.

The first of these entertainments took place in St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, the 20th ult., and was fairly well attended. Advice may fitly be given to the concert agency under which this performance was given that the printed programmes might afford a little more information concerning the compositions to be offered to the audience. "Sonata, No. 2, St.-Saëns" does not convey very much, but the work proved to be that in E flat, which was first introduced here by Messrs. Sarasate and Otto Neitzel on June 20 of the present year. Like most of the French musician's ambitious efforts, it is rather German in character—that is to say, intellectual rather than sentimental, and certainly not remarkable for individuality. It was supremely well played on the present occasion by the artists named at the head of this notice. Far more impassioned is Raff's "Sonata Chromatique," which ended the programme. This work justifies its title owing to restlessness in modulation, but it cannot be said to be wanting in tunefulness. A Concertstück by F. Rasse, a composer entirely unfamiliar to us, at any rate afforded Mr. Ysaye full opportunity for the display of his magnificent technique, though, as music, it did not seem to possess much interest on a first hearing. Excess of energy marred the effect sought to be created by Mr. Delafosse in a group of pianoforte solos, for he frequently struck his instrument as if he regarded it as an enemy rather than a friend, though in piano phrases his touch was charming. The next Recital was announced for the 27th ult., too late for notice in the present issue of The Musical Times.

MR. N. VERT'S CONCERT.

The autumn season at St. James's Hall was opened on Saturday afternoon, the 10th ult., with a miscellaneous Concert given by N. Vert, who, as a musical agent, may justly be said to occupy a very high position. Mr. Vert had secured several esteemed artists, but, of course, entertainments of this description do not need lengthy criticism. Madame Hast and Mr. Hollman commenced the Concert with an Adagio by Godard for pianoforte and violoncello, and other instrumental pieces were two solos by Servais and Davidoff for violoncello, interpreted, of course, technically to perfection by M. Hollman, who, in spite of his rather harsh, nasal tone, so pleased the audience that an encore was exacted. Mr. Santley in Gounod's "Maid of Athens," Mr. Edward Lloyd in Godard's lovely Berceuse "Angels guard thee," Miss Macintyre in an air by Verdi—not "Ernani involami," which was set down for her in the first part of the programme—and Mr. George Grossmith in his humorous sketches, were among those who gave much satisfaction to the crowded audience.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

The Sunday Afternoon Orchestral Concerts at the Queen's Hall were resumed on the 4th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. Randegger, the programmes being marked by the artistic interest that distinguished those of last season. Among the works heard at the first four Concerts have been Beethoven's Symphony in A, "Leonora" and "Egmont" Overtures, Haydn's Symphony in G ("Letter V."), Mr. German's "Gipsy" and D minor Suites, and the Sacred Dance from Mancinelli's "Hero and Leander" (its first performance in London). The soloists have been Madame Belle Cole, Miss Lucile Hill, MM. Johannes Wolff, Hollman, Hirwen Jones, and P. Frostick; the accompanists, Messrs. H. J. Wood and Percy Pitt.

The National Sunday League opened its new season, at the same hall, on the 11th ult., with a performance of the "Golden Legend," which attracted an enormous audience. The soloists were Madame Thudichum, Madame Inverni, Messrs. McGuckin, Ffrangcon-Davies, and Strugnell; and choir and orchestra numbered about 350 performers. The following Sunday the first performance in London was given of Mr. Edward Elgar's "The Light of Life," produced at the recent Worcester Festival. The soloists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and the choruses and orchestral portions were meritoriously rendered by Mr. Churchill Sibley's forces, about 350 in number. The clever work was well received by a crowded audience, Miss Anna Williams's expressive singing of "Be not extreme" and the dramatic portions of the choruses being particularly appreciated. The oratorio was followed by Rossini's setting of the "Stabat Mater."

The same evening, in the Queen's (Small) Hall, Mr. Newman began a series of Chamber Concerts, to take place every Sunday evening at 7.30 p.m. throughout the winter. The quartet players are Señor Arbos, Messrs. Ferdinand Weist Hill, Alfred Hobday, and W. H. Squire, and Mr. Henry J. Wood is the accompanist. The works selected for the initial programme were Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1), Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3), Bach's Adagio and Fugue in G minor for violin, and songs entrusted to Madame Emily Squire.

The performances of Classical Chamber Music have been resumed at the South Place Institute, and the Afternoon Concerts at the Albert Hall have attracted their usual attendance.

SALTAIRE CHORAL COMPETITION.

The Saltaire Choir, famous for its success at numerous competitions, has instituted a competition in its own town to which near and distant choirs are freely invited. On these occasions the Saltaire Choir itself bows to an appropriate self-denying ordinance and does not compete. The competition this year was held in the Victoria Hall, Saltaire, on the 17th ult. There were two classes—Class I., open to all, first prize £15, second prize £7; and Class II., open only to choirs that had not previously won a first prize, first prize £7, second prize £3. Eight choirs entered for Class I. and ten choirs for Class II. Each choir had to sing one piece accompanied and one unaccompanied, the choice of music being left to the choirs. Dr. McNaught was the adjudicator.

The first prize in Class I. was awarded to the Batley Prize Vocal Union (conductor, Mr. John Tomlinson), for its fine performance of "The Three Fishers" (Dr. Rogers) and "Daybreak" (Faning), and the second prize to the Armley and District Society (conductor, Mr. Pickard), for its nearly as excellent renderings of "Hymn to Music" (Buck) and "Song of the Vikings" (Faning). In Class II. the Wortley Institute Vocal Union (conductor, Mr. John Rinder) sang "How sweet the moonlight sleeps" (Leslie) and "Hymn to Music" (Buck), and gained the first prize; and the Ossett Vocal Union (conductor, Mr. J. F. Taylor) sang "The sea hath its pearls" (Pinsuti) and "Hail, memory, hail!" (Battye), and gained the second prize.

The audience in the afternoon was fairly large, but in the evening the hall was packed by nearly 1,400 persons. The singing of the best choirs was marked by beauty of tone and refined expression. The audience was quick to recognise merit and applauded the choirs vigorously. At the adjudication Dr. McNaught said that the performance of "Daybreak" by the Batley Choir, so far as regards tone, attack, and expression, was almost beyond praise. If it had not been that the pace was somewhat too fast he would have given them full marks. He very much envied the Yorkshire singers their fine, full, resonant vowels, and admitted that down South they could not approach the North in such matters, although he believed that Londoners could get the needed refinement. Mr. James Roberts was the chairman, and the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Ellis Denby, of Shipley. The arrangements were under the superintendence of Mr. Geo. Sanctuary, the secretary of the Saltaire Choir, and of Mr. Ashworth, the conductor.

FRANCO-RUSSIAN THEATRICAL GALAS.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

The news of the Czar's visit to Paris set the local stage-land in hopeful trepidation for a month at least before there was any ostensible reason for all and sundry to leave the rails of common-sense. Monarchs en exil or de passage are no novelty to the Parisian, and the pattern of special entertainments worthy of each occasion is pretty well established; there is a gala at the Opéra, as a rule, with a strut across the foyer de la danse; a Figaro "feevoclocque" at 9 o'clock p.m.; some manifestation on the part of la presse in general, and an eccentric tournée incog. for the final banquet. But the Emperor of Russia made it clear he would not appreciate anything that flavoured of familiarity, and so private ingenuity had to subside before the imposed figure of officialdom; enjoyment had to submit to the P-r-r-rotocol, and theatrical spectacle had to put up with limitations so far unknown to that enfant gâté. There is no knowing to-day what might have been done in this direction had the arrangements been confided to a Press festival Committee, as was originally anticipated; but one may assert safely that what was actually provided in the way of galas could not have been surpassed in dulness by any self-appointed body—in Paris, at least; for exception must be made in favour of the Versailles Intermède. Indeed, the aspect of the Imperial countenance during the progress of the Opéra programme was a perfect study in amazed ennui, and if proceedings seemed just a trifle livelier at the Comédie Française, the phenomenon was due entirely to the attitude of the public, who, forewarned by the impressions of the operatic gala, resolved this time to take matters of enthusiasm in its own hands. At the Opéra there was not as much as a solitary "bravo" during a two hours' spectacle—the regulation plaudits accompanying the Russian hymn excepted — and the crescendo of depression as scene after scene followed in polite silence was such that, had the Czar's sudden indisposition not cut the spectacle short, its very dulness would have been quite sufficient to affect His Majesty mentally if not bodily. And how could it have been otherwise when one considers all that went towards the making of the programme! M. Gailhard's initial plan of the gala performance was such as one could have expected from a man of his taste and experience: the beautiful ballet music from "Le Cid," sandwiched between two short vocal scenas, with the Russian hymn and the "Marseillaise" for preface and epilogue. But this would not do for the Protocol, the Elysée fuss-makers, and all the host of petty vanities; so that it was resolved first of all that only French composers should be represented, to the exclusion of Wagner, Verdi, Meyerbeer, &c.; secondly, le jeunes were carefully eliminated, and from the not over-exhaustive list of grand opera writers, all the dead masters—three in number—were struck out; finally, it was decided that only academicians be included in the programme. Then came the question of interpreters. Only the chefs d'emploi were elected, regardless of other qualifications; and, that nobody should feel aggrieved, the rest of the magnificent company was allowed to take part in the chorus, and every chef d'orchestre was provided with a tit-bit in the programme. Thus MM. Saint-Saëns, Reyer, Massenet, Widor, Taffanel, Mangin, Vidal, Alvarez, Gresse, Noté, Renaud, and Mesdames Caron and Mauri all had their little satisfaction, not unmixed with great expectations; but thus also was that satisfaction of short duration, whilst hopes were doomed to disappointment. The respectable "Marche Héroïque" of Saint-Saëns, the trivially suggestive "Meditation" from Massenet's "Thaïs," the flimsy music of Widor's "Korrigane," and even the interesting, if pretentious, second Act of Reyer's "Sigurd" fell, one and all, flat; and as the interval of twenty minutes came into operation, there was expressed from the State box no desire either to visit the coulisses or to admit the performers into Imperial presence. And the scene on the stage, as at a sign from the Czar the dancing was abruptly stopped, and the orchestra struck up "Boje Czarya hrani"—clarinets and trombones taking the cue first, by the way—with the "Marseillaise" to follow! Were all that was then said faithfully reported, who knows what turn the negotiations for the Dual Alliance might have taken! But the only witness of the scene, your special correspondent, having been the only foreign journalist invited to the gala, is bound to secrecy by obvious considerations, and the world will never know how Rosita Mauri took the interference with her pointes and battements. MM. Gailhard and Bertrand have received the Cross of St. Anne in diamonds, with Imperial compliments; but not even a word of thanks was conveyed to the artists. At the Français the atmosphere proved more intime—or is it that their Imperial Majesties understand French better than music?—and right at the outset the audience ignored the rules of etiquette, bursting into frantic applause as M. Mounet Sully, younger and handsomer than ever, rolled out with magnificent emphasis the verses about "Hope that comes from the North." The programme comprises A. de Musset's "Un caprice," and fragments from Molière's "Les femmes Savantes" and Corneille's "Le Cid." Less languor is noticeable in the Imperial box. M. Claretie, en académicien, is in attendance on their Majesties, and during the interval the artists are called in and introduced, the Czar finding a suitable word for each. In the end M. Claretie receives the Cross of St. Stanislas, second class.

The Intermède at Versailles was an exclusive entertainment organised for the President of the Republic and the Imperial guests, some ninety invitations having been issued in all. The Intermède must not be confounded with the Versailles reception in general, as here there was free access to the park, and hundreds of admissions had been granted besides for the interior of the Palace. In the Salon d'Hercule, where the Intermède was given, only two journalists were present—M. Jules Huret, of the Figaro, and your correspondent. The sight of the magnificent hall, with its parterre of august and distinguished personages, was a never-to-be-forgotten one; but it was singularly enhanced yet by the series of delightful performances on the daintily decorated platform which faced the assembly. The Czar and Czarina seem at last to feel at home, and for the first time one notices that the somewhat worried gaze of the Empress is lit up by a ray of interest. Madame Sarah Bernhardt's recitation, and the vocal exertions of Madame Delna and MM. Fugère and Delmas receive polite attention, but it is evident that the audience expects more amused enjoyment. And here it is, as, after M. Delaunay, appears Coquelin, with one of his inimitable monologues, "Le sous-préfet aux Champs," and one notices that the celebrated comedian is honoured by a nod from the Emperor. Mdlle. Réjane, in "Lolotte," provokes genuine laughter and Imperial regrets that c'est déjà fini; but the supreme moment of the programme—indeed, of the evening—was the appearance of the Opéra ballet in a reconstitution of old dances. It was almost in religious silence that one received the artists, as in stately procession they first defiled before the audience and then set out all the graces of the gavotte and the refinement of the minuet to the accompaniment of a string orchestra. It was really a moment of poignant sensation as those figures in Louis XIV. and Louis XV. costumes paraded with quaint préciosité of gesture and step in the palace of the Grand Monarque; and though Madame Réjane's mince alors provoked most mirth, it is Rameau's and Lulli's music, admirably played and danced, that must have left the most profound impression on the minds of those present.

THE MUSIC TO "CYMBELINE."

Sir Henry Irving, with his customary regard to completeness of detail, has secured for his representation of Shakespeare's "Cymbeline," produced on September 22, at the Lyceum Theatre, an excellent selection of music, for which recourse has chiefly been made to the score of Albert Dietrich, who, it may be remembered, was born near Meissen in 1829, and is accepted as being one of the most distinguished of Schumann's pupils. The Overture and four Entr'actes are by this composer, and are all distinguished by earnestness of purpose and musicianlike qualities. The Overture is fairly suggestive of the nature of the story which follows, and the character of the Entr'actes has manifestly been dictated by the prevailing sentiment of the scenes they were intended to precede. Mr. Hamilton Clarke has written sundry incidental passages to accompany the rising of the act-drops, the dance in Philario's house in the first act, the "solemn music" at the supposed death of Imogen, and the madrigal, "Hark, hark the lark." The last-named fulfils Cloten's demand for "a very excellent good conceited thing," but cannot be said to also meet the requirement for "a wonderful sweet air."

ANTON BRUCKNER.

In recording with regret the death, on the 11th ult., at Vienna, of Dr. Anton Bruckner, we are aware that to many amateurs in this country the remarkable Austrian composer, if not heard of for the first time, will be little more than a name. And yet it is a name around which some fierce, if bloodless, battles have been fought on the Continent. Anton Bruckner has been glorified by some as the "Wagner of the Symphony"—a fact which may serve to indicate his artistic bias. He has been suffered by his most zealous partisans to be placed, indeed, upon the same pedestal with Johannes Brahms, but on condition that he should be allowed to tower head and shoulders above him. Sufficient elements here for determined and bitter contention. On the other hand, he has been looked upon by the great majority of his critics as a mere learned musical pedagogue, devoid of the divine gift of imagination, whose compositions are so many intricate contrapuntal exercises on a vast scale; a very Dry-as-dust of musical literature. And all the while the subject of such diametrically opposed opinions has been living the quiet and uneventful life of an organist and teacher in the Austrian capital, a modest and unassuming man, adding symphony to symphony to the number of eight, together with other works of equal pretentions, while years elapsed before one of these was vouchsafed a public hearing. Time is not yet for the forming of a just estimate of their relative importance. When it comes, a place will doubtless be assigned to him somewhere between the two extremes alluded to, though it will certainly be an enduring one. As regards the symphonies, one of which, the third, is dedicated to Wagner, they may be likened, on a first hearing, to a desert sprinkled here and there with oases, luxuriant, almost voluptuous, in their vegetation, and hailed with delight by the weary traveller thus predisposed to fullest appreciation. These oases may very probably increase in number upon closer acquaintance, and how many symphonies have been written since Beethoven and Schumann which have proved deserts pure and simple? The fact, at all events, remains that Bruckner's symphonies have been more and more frequently performed in Austria and Germany of late years, thanks to Dr. Hans Richter, Herr Mottl, and other prominent conductors, and that the number of their admirers has been steadily increasing. Bruckner's genius aims at the colossal. In his symphonies the form has been expanded to its utmost limits; they are orchestral trilogies or tetralogies. His "Germanenzug" is intended to be performed, as it was at the recent Male Choir Festival in Stuttgart, by thousands of voices. His Te Deum is not a hymn of praise offered up by a congregation; it is the homage rendered by the Church Universal to the Godhead. A Handelian or Mozartian Te Deum sung by a church choir might well represent the expression, for the time being, of all Christendom. Bruckner's, performed even by a cathedral choir, would be an anomaly: it cannot dispense with the force of numbers. Small wonder then if in constructing edifices of such vast design the architect appears to be deficient at times in a sense of due proportion, and to be apparently aiming at the unattainable. Wagner himself has been frequently taxed, even in these days, with a similar defect in his artistic vision. Intensely active and emotional as Bruckner's inner life must thus have been, his outward career, as we have indicated, was of the simplest, though not free from material privations and mental sufferings in its earlier stages. Born September 3, 1824, at Ansfelden, in Upper Austria, the son of a schoolmaster in humble circumstances, he followed for a time the father's profession, while, under the tuition of the local organist, he rendered himself a proficient in that instrument. Having in the latter capacity attracted some attention beyond the limits of his native place, he was called, at the age of twenty-one, to the organistship of the Cathedral at Linz. With characteristic self-inspection and zeal, while accepting the relatively important appointment, he at once supplemented his, for the greater part, self-acquired musical education by undergoing a complete course of tuition under Simon Sechter, the famous Viennese contrapuntist, who, on his part, is said to have designated young Bruckner as his eventual successor. As a matter of fact, the latter, upon the death of Sechter, in 1868, succeeded to the post of organist of the Imperial Chapel and also to the professorship of organ and counterpoint at the Vienna Conservatorium, to which appointments was added, in 1875, the chair of history and theory of music at the University. Although in a precarious state of health during the last year or two, he filled these positions to the last, and an extensive course of lectures, to be delivered by him during the winter, had quite recently been announced at the Viennese University. Bruckner's compositions are as yet but little known in England. He visited London in 1871, when he gave a series of recitals, and his Seventh Symphony was produced at a Richter Concert at St. James's Hall in 1887. His principal compositions include, with those already referred to, two Grand Masses in D and F minor respectively, a Quintet in F major, and many others for church and chamber. Three movements of a Ninth Symphony are said to have been completed at the time of his death. He died in the Palace of Belvedere, where he had latterly resided at the instance of his Emperor, by whom he was held in great esteem and affection. Bruckner's intimate friendship with Richard Wagner, and the high opinion entertained by the Bayreuth master of his friend as a composer, are historical facts which should assist, now he has passed away, in obtaining for his works a more general and impartial hearing.

Among the novelties to be produced at Mr. Henschel's Symphony Concerts are Smetana's Symphonic Poem "Richard III.," Dvorák's Te Deum (Op. 103), and an Idyl for orchestra by B. Luard Selby. Brahms's "Requiem" will also be given, for the first time at these Concerts, and on February 18 the programme will be devoted exclusively to the compositions of Wagner, except that Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony will again be played in memory of the former composer.

REVIEWS.

My Reminiscences. By Luigi Arditi. [Skeffington and Son.]

There will be no lack of material for the future historian of the progress of music and the lives of artists of the nineteenth century, and among the most valuable of the many "Reminiscences" which have been published of late years will be those of Signor Luigi Arditi. This is not only because of the long period—about sixty years—over which the genial musician's recollections extends, but because, although colloquial and often diffuse in style, he supports his statements by dates and verifying particulars, the latter in some instances throwing a light upon sundry matters which hitherto have been in puzzling obscurity. In the introduction, which, in common with the book, has been written by Baroness Marie Antoinette von Zedlitz, we are told that "Signor Luigi Arditi was born at Crescentino, a small picturesque town which nestles in the lap of Piedmont, on July 16, 1822," and that "at the age of seven he begged his father to give him a violin in preference to any toy." He early received instruction on this instrument, and made such good progress that, at the age of twelve, he was permitted to play in the orchestra of the theatre of his native town. The relation of his subsequent career and experiences show in an interesting manner the changes in taste and artistic tendencies of the last fifty years, and the numerous, and in most cases amusing, anecdotes relating to prominent composers and great executants possess much artistic interest, the more so as they are free from all ill-nature or narrow-mindedness. Speaking of Wagner, to whom Signor Arditi was first introduced at Vienna, he says: "I shall never forget seeing Wagner conduct. His carriage was erect and imposing, and made the impression of his being somewhat taller than he really was. His manner was sharp and hasty, and at times intensely nervous, but his rich voice gave effect to his words, and all who came in contact with him were bound to be subdued by his commanding personality. He was always unconventional, and his appearance betokened great refinement." Numerous fac-simile letters from celebrated artists and a number of excellent portraits are also included in the work, which is concluded with a remarkably comprehensive list of composers, instrumentalists, and vocalists which the author has personally known.

My Long Life. An Autobiographic Sketch. By Mary Cowden-Clarke. [T. Fisher Unwin.]

To read this attractive volume is to be carried back in spirit to the early part of the present century, when Oxford Street was called Oxford Road and "still bore some traces of a somewhat suburban exit from that Western quarter of London." When "half-penny little mugs of curds and whey" were sold near Cumberland Gate, now known as the Marble Arch. When soldiers were marched to parade in Hyde Park headed by a "magnificent and imperious drum-major," and a black man "who upheld a kind of Oriental standard that had horse tails dangling therefrom, and jingling bells pendant from a central silver crescent," popularly known as a "Jingling Johnny." When Princess Charlotte was to be seen going to Court with "the indispensable hoop tilted sideways to enable her to take her seat in the carriage, and the equally indispensable huge plume of feathers." Such are the scenes contained in the recollections of the authoress of this "sketch," who says "I was born on the 22nd of June, 1809, in the same house where my father, Vincent Novello, was born—No. 240, Oxford Road," and who has since gazed out upon the world through kindly tinted spectacles, and has found it very good. Vincent Novello was organist for twenty-six years at the Portuguese Embassy's Chapel, South Street, Grosvenor Square, where his organ playing attained such renown that "it was playfully said that his 'voluntaries,' intended to 'play out' the congregation, on the contrary, kept them in, listening to the very last note." To No. 240, Oxford Road, also came many musical and literary celebrities; amongst them, Leigh Hunt, concerning whom the authoress says: "I can remember once creeping round to where Leigh Hunt's hand rested on the back of the sofa upon which he sat, and giving it a quiet kiss, because I heard he was a poet"—an act of homage singularly appropriate from one who was later to devote sixteen years of her life to writing the Concordance to Shakespeare. Amid such surroundings it is not surprising that the artistic events of the day should become vividly impressed on so sympathetic a mind, which has cherished them so lovingly as to enable the authoress to endow with palpitating personality many celebrities who now, to most people, live only in their works or by reputation. Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's husband being a dramatic critic, she has much to say concerning the elder Matthews, Liston, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kemble, and other equally well-known actors and actresses. Of greater interest to the musician, however, is the information concerning the early years of Clara Novello and the account of a musical evening in which Mendelssohn, Malibran, and De Bériot took part, at 67, Frith Street, where the authoress's father had removed, and begun, with his son, Alfred, the publication of the fruitful series of cheap music. The references to the private life of Clara Novello, after she became Countess Gigliucci, and to the home of the authoress at the "Villa Novello," Genoa, and its visitors are pleasant reading. Continental tours and their consequent incidents also furnish many attractive pages. Not one of the least of these is the account of the following occurrence, which took place while Mrs. Cowden-Clarke was on a visit to Mr. Littleton, prior to the production of "The Redemption" at the Birmingham Festival of 1882: "When I began to ecstasise on the sublimity of the work, he (Gounod) owned that he nearly shed tears as he wrote its concluding bars, so intensely had he felt the delight of composing it. When I told him how keenly I sympathised with this feeling, and how I thought that, upon the completion of a work into which one has put one's heart, one feels inspired to commence another, he said, 'Commencer un œuvre d'art qu'on aime, est comme un mariage d'amour'"—a remark that will probably become memorable. It should be added that the book contains many excellent portraits of members of the family which has exercised so noteworthy an influence on the progress of music in this country.

Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 535—545. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

We have here a choice selection of Church Music, all of which is not actually new. For example, the first number at present before us is "Have mercy upon me," by the late John Goss. This was primarily intended for Lent, but it is a verse anthem, written in Goss's most refined manner, with a comparatively bright fugal ending. No. 536 is "O joyful night," by Berthold Tours, being an English version of "O Lux Beata," penned in a broad and vigorous style for solo, quartet, and chorus, and quite modern in feeling. We have next two anthems for Eastertide or general use. "We declare to you the Gospel," by W. A. C. Cruickshank, opens with a brief bass recitative, and later on there is a soprano solo, the rest being tolerably easy four-part writing for chorus. "When Christ, Who is our life, shall appear," by J. Varley Roberts, is a very unpretentious composition of four pages only, though it ends with a brief fugato. The words are the fourth verse of the third chapter from the Epistle to the Colossians. No. 539, "I am Alpha and Omega," by J. Varley Roberts, is an easy piece, suitable for the average choir. No. 540, "Teach me, O Lord," and 541, "While shepherds watched," by George J. Elvey, are two of the late organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle's most unambitious compositions. More elaborate is "Sing to the Lord," for harvest-tide, by Joseph Barnby (No. 542). This is a very fine example of a full anthem in the lamented musician's best style, the majestic hymn-like peroration being exceedingly impressive. Much quieter and perfectly devotional is the same composer's "O Lamb of God" (No. 543), for bass solo and chorus, this being suitable for the Communion Service. No. 544, "If ye love Me," by Bruce Steane, is a short three-page anthem for Whitsuntide, directed to be sung unaccompanied. Much longer and more varied is No. 545, "Hail, gladdening Light," by G. C. Martin, suitable for festival use at evensong. It is very bold and majestic, but not so difficult as it may appear at first sight on paper.

English Lyrics. (Fourth Set.) Set to music by C. Hubert H. Parry. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The poems chosen by Dr. Parry for his fourth set of "English Lyrics" are by Emerson, L. E. Mitchell, Byron, Keats, and that very voluminous writer "Anon." It is difficult, without going to a considerable extent into detail and technical matters to adequately describe the master-like power of musical expression and command of the manifold resources of rhythm exhibited by the composer in these songs. They are six in number, the first of which is Emerson's "Thine eyes still shine for me," every word of which seems to find a sympathetic companion in the music. The happy optimism of "When lovers meet again," by L. E. Mitchell, is no less successfully echoed in the accompanying strains. In the setting of Byron's "When we two parted," a still higher level is attained and the tragic significance of the lines is strongly accentuated. Few songs possess a brief introduction—four bars only—which so perfectly epitomises the sentiment of that which follows, and the setting of the passage beginning "In secret we met" is simply exquisite. The other poem, selected from Byron, consists of the lines beginning "There be none of beauty's daughters," which are set with remarkable vivaciousness. The text of "Weep you no more" has been wedded to music of great expressiveness. Excellent use is made of a triplet figure in the accompaniment, and a beautiful effect is obtained by a harmonic transition immediately after the first double-bar. Keats's "Bright Star" has received a brilliant setting and one that will rejoice the hearts of cultured vocalists and pianists. It should be added that the songs have manifestly been laid out for a tenor voice.

Souvenir d'un Bal. Air de Ballet. By Charles Gounod. Arranged as a song by G. Vaillant. Words by Paul Collin. English words by Theo. Marzials.

Chanson de Juillet. By Benjamin Godard. Words by Edouard Guinand. English words by Paul England. [Metzler and Co.]

The first of these is headed Oeuvre Posthume, not always a recommendation, since it sometimes indicates that which a composer has thought unworthy of publication. So many hands have contributed to the song under review that it is difficult to know how much of the music is due to the celebrated composer; but the result is a lively and graceful ditty which may be recommended to the attention of such English vocalists as can enter into the spirit of French music of this description.

Vocalists who are acquainted with the style of Benjamin Godard will find a characteristic example of his talent in "Chanson de Juillet." It is suitable for a tenor or a soprano in point of compass, but in sentiment it is more suited to the former than the latter. Only accomplished pianists had better attempt to read the accompaniment at sight.

Original Compositions and Arrangements for the Organ. By Joseph C. Bridge. No. 1. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The first number of this new publication consists of an Overture in G major, by the editor. An Andante con moto with mysterious changes of key leads into an Allegro vivace, commencing with a flowing, melodious subject in three-four time with an energetic continuation, and leading eventually into the subdominant, in which key the hymn-like second theme is introduced. The working-out is noteworthy for the discursive treatment of the principal motive; but no new material of importance is introduced, and the movement proceeds in a perfectly legitimate manner to an orthodox conclusion.

Tarantella for the Pianoforte. By Charles Gardner.

Pianoforte Album. By Marston Moore.

Marion, Valse Brilliante. For Pianoforte. By Oscar Allon. [Weekes and Co.]

The effects of the bite of the legendary spider would seem likely to go on for all time, for the form of the Tarantella dance still possesses considerable attraction for composers. Mr. Gardner has written a vivacious piece, which if played with spirit would be effective; but it might be mistaken for hundreds of others which have preceded it.

Mr. Moore's Album consists of five little pieces of unpretentious and simple character, but which possess some musical charm. The Album will doubtless appeal to pianists of limited abilities.

Mr. Allon's Waltz possesses little brilliancy of a florid kind, but the composer has cleverly avoided the monotony of rhythm which too often characterises works in this form. It is easy to read and would make a pleasing drawing-room piece.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Among the most important Concerts of the past month the place of honour must be assigned to the Birmingham Festival Choral Society's Jubilee performance of "Elijah," which was given in the Town Hall on the 8th ult., in the presence of an audience that filled every available seat. The committee sent invitations to the surviving members of the first "Elijah" chorus, who were accommodated with seats in the orchestra, while one of Mendelssohn's grandchildren occupied a seat in the side-gallery. The singing of the chorus was distinguished by remarkable tone power, precision, and fervour, the like of which has not been surpassed even at our Festivals. Thanks are due to Dr. Heap; there is no more experienced conductor of the "Elijah" in the country, he having conducted the great oratorio upwards of thirty-five times in all parts of the Midlands. The orchestra, which numbered some eighty performers, never played better, and in Mr. C. W. Perkins the conductor had a most reliable and accomplished organist. The principals were Mesdames Marie Duma and Belle Cole, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, assistance in the double quartet being given by local artists. In the quartet "Cast thy burden," the bass part was assigned to Mr. Pountney, who was a chorister at the first performance, and who is still an active member of the choir. The greatest artistic triumph was achieved by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, whose conception of Elijah was marked by striking individuality, and whose reading of the part revealed quite new features.

Messrs. Harrison's first popular Subscription Concert of the season was given in the Town Hall, on the 5th ult., and attracted, as usual, a large and fashionable audience. The Concert was of a miscellaneous character, the great feature being Lady Hallé's exquisite playing of Handel's Violin Sonata in A major and Néruda's quaint "Berceuse Slave" in D minor (Op. 11). Madame Nordica, who has not been heard here for some years, was the principal vocalist; but, unfortunately, she had contracted a sore throat on her return from America, and did not do justice to her powers. The other vocalists were Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Ley Vernon, and Mr. Santley. Mr. Felix Corbett was the pianist, Mr. Sydney Brooks, violoncellist, and Mr. Watkis, accompanist.

In the Town Hall, on the 14th ult., Mr. Stockley gave the first of his twenty-fourth annual series of Orchestral Subscription Concerts in the presence of a fairly large audience. The principal orchestral pieces were Dvorák's Overture "Le Carnaval," Goldmark's Overture "Sakuntala," Bizet's Suite "L'Arlesienne," and Sullivan's "In Bethany," an Andante for string orchestra, from the oratorio "The Light of the World." A feature of the Concert was Mr. Leonard Borwick's magnificent rendering of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. In the second part of the programme he gave Chopin's beautiful Prelude in D flat and Liszt's somewhat hackneyed second Rhapsodie Hongroise. Mrs. Helen Trust, who was the only vocalist, sang with the utmost charm Grieg's "Solvejg's Lied."

The Church Choral Association for the archdeaconries of Coventry and Birmingham held a grand choral Festival at St. Philip's Church, when the amalgamated choirs of fifteen of our local churches took part in the musical service. Mr. John Heywood was the conductor, and Mr. Yates Mander the organist. In honour of this celebration several new compositions by local composers, specially written for this Festival, constituted the principal musical events. These were, two processional hymns by Mr. Henry Taylor and Mr. Tearne, a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F major by C. J. B. Meacham, and an anthem, "I was glad," by Mr. Alfred R. Gaul. The singing was superb in every detail, the beautiful and pure quality of the treble voices being specially noticeable.

Mr. John Dunn, the eminent violinist, appeared at one of the popular Saturday night Town Hall Concerts, and achieved, as he always does, immense success.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Dublin Musical Society has a long and attractive programme for the coming season. The November Concert will consist of Edgar Tinel's oratorio "St. Francis," and in addition to the usual Subscription Concerts and extra Christmas performance there are to be two Instrumental Concerts. Thus Dublin may again hear the great symphonies, and for this she will have to thank Dr. Joseph Smith, the enterprising conductor of the Dublin Musical Society.

The University of Dublin Choral Society has held its annual meeting and appointed officers for the coming season. Mr. Ch. Marchant will be conductor.

The Leinster branch of the Incorporated Society of Musicians held its annual meeting on the 17th ult. The report shows a roll of seventy-eight members, and a substantial balance in bank. Dr. T. R. G. Jozé and Mr. Joseph Seymour were re-elected hon. secretary and treasurer respectively.

A new musical society has been established in connection with the Tonic Sol-fa College, London, with a scheme of concerts, classes, and examinations. The concert choir of 100 voices is to be entitled "The Dublin Glee Singers," under the direction of Mr. Joseph Seymour.

Mr. Barton McGuckin announced a grand Concert in the Leinster Hall for the 24th ult., with Miss Carrie Donald, Miss Florence Daly, Mr. Denis O'Sullivan (of "Shamus O'Brien" fame), Signor Foli, and Mr. Thomas Mawhinney.

The Annual Vocal and Instrumental Concert by the inmates of the Blind Asylum, Merrion, announced to take place in the Leinster Hall, on the 21st ult., derived special interest from the fact that the vocalists are trained by the Braille System applied to Tonic Sol-fa and the instrumentalists by the same system applied to Staff Notation.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical events in October have been few, but by no means devoid of interest. On the 3rd ult., at the opening meeting of the Dundee Society of Musicians, Professor Niecks gave a Lecture on "Wagner, as man and composer." The Lecture was very interesting and greatly appreciated by a large number of members. At the close of the meeting Professor Niecks was elected an hon. member of the Society.

On the 8th ult. a Chamber Concert was given by Mr. W. P. Fleming, assisted by M. Sons and Madame Lebrun. As is usual at Dundee Chamber Concerts, the audience was small and quite out of proportion to the excellence of the music. The programme contained no novelties, but was well chosen and admirably interpreted.

The first of the Harrison-Simpson Subscription Concerts was held on the 14th ult., and Madame Patti's name was sufficient to attract a huge audience. Her solos included the inevitable "Il Bacio" and "Home, sweet home," but one cannot grumble at the repetition of such gems as Mozart's "Voi che sapete" and "Vedrai Carino." Among the other performers special praise is due to Mr. Norman Salmond and Mr. Leo Stern, and also to Mr. Watkis, whose accompanying was excellent.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Norfolk and Norwich Triennial Musical Festival has, for the time being, entirely stifled amateur efforts, consequently there is but little of interest to report this month; but with the passing of the above event, which is noticed specially in another column, our local societies are beginning to show signs of life. The Norwich Philharmonic Society held its annual meeting on the 17th ult., when the officers for the ensuing year were elected and practices commenced, Dr. Hill continuing to hold the important post of conductor. The secretary was enabled to present a very satisfactory balance-sheet of the past year. Before this is published our premier vocal association (the Gate House Choir) will also have taken the field.

The two following events may be noticed as evidences of the spread of musical culture in the smaller centres of this district:—

The Mildenhall Musical Society was responsible for a vocal and instrumental Concert, which took place in the Town Hall on the 1st ult. With a band of twenty performers, chiefly local amateurs, conducted by Mr. J. D. Antill, highly creditable performances were given of several popular pieces. Mr. R. H. Ingram's violin solos were much appreciated, as was a cornet solo by Mr. W. Marchant. Vocal selections were contributed by Miss Rumbelow, Miss M. James, Rev. A. W. Ivatt, Mr. W. S. Owers, and Mr. Ingram, jun.

It has been decided to resuscitate the Choral Society which existed in Downham Market for several years. Mr. C. H. Lewis has been appointed conductor, and it is hoped that members will attend with sufficient regularity to enable two Concerts to be given during the season.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It is not likely that any event in the record of this season's music in Edinburgh will be of more importance than Mr. d'Albert's first appearance. The Music Hall was well filled on the 17th ult., but many were absent who should not have missed the opportunity of judging D'Albert's playing for themselves; and his European reputation ought to have secured for him, at his first Recital, at least, an overflowing audience. The programme was as representative of all styles as the most exacting critic could have wished. Mozart's charming Rondo in A was, perhaps, the most successful number in the programme, and sustained applause showed what a revelation it was to the audience alike of the composer's intention and of the artist's power of graceful poetic interpretation. The slow movement of the "Waldstein" was another rare treat, and so was a less familiar Nocturne of Chopin. Next to the Mozart Rondo the most artistic achievement in the Recital was perhaps the Chopin "Berceuse," given as an encore. Three pieces by Liszt concluded the programme, and the display of "virtuosity" in the "Tarantelle" procured D'Albert an enthusiastic encore, in response to which he played the favourite "Liebestraum." The perfection of his sympathetic touch, delicate nuance, and pianissimo effects were well displayed by the beauty of the instrument on which he had the good fortune to play.

Dr. Richter's annual visit attracted a large audience to the Music Hall on the 21st ult. The great conductor was most enthusiastically received and repeatedly called to the platform at the close of the Concert. The programme included "Till Eulenspiegel" and Dvorák's Capriccioso, besides the Wagner selection which is the feature of all Dr. Richter's Concerts.

Mr. Learmont Drysdale's "Mystic Musical Play," entitled "The Plague," has been produced with marked success at the Lyceum Theatre. The gruesome story turns on the decision of a wife, who is offered by the Angel of Death the choice of the life of her husband or child, both of whom are suffering from the disease. The peculiarity of the work is that the music is confined to an endeavour to reflect the moods and emotions of the characters as they deliver the dialogue or meditate. The only words sung are uttered by an unseen choir. This treatment is novel, but whether it will mark a new departure in musical dramatic art is doubtful. The husband and wife were respectively impersonated by Mr. Forbes Robertson and Miss Lily Hanbury, and the part of the Apothecary was sustained by the author of the play, Mr. Ian Robertson. The composer conducted an efficient orchestra, and, together with the author, was called before the curtain at the close.

A new Choral Association has been formed in Edinburgh, under the direction of Mr. Moonie, whose enthusiasm and ability were well proved in the artistic success which characterised the performances of his male-voice choir. Mr. Moonie's choir made a very promising start last month. Saint-Saëns's "The Heavens declare" and Cowen's "Water Lily" are promised at the first Concert.

Those who know and have any interest in Edinburgh will be glad to learn the site of the new Usher Music Hall. The large block of buildings in Castle Terrace, East of the Lyceum Theatre and Synod Hall, is to be pulled down, and the hall will be built there, right under the noble Castle Rock.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Oft and again has the Glasgow Society of Musicians entertained the foremost artists of the day, and on the evening of September 30 the management once more honoured itself. Mr. Manuel Garcia had accepted the Society's invitation to be its guest, a large company of ladies and gentlemen—including several leading medical men—sat down to dinner, and the chair was worthily occupied by Mr. Julius Seligmann, who felicitously described the veteran teacher as "a young man of ninety-one-and-a-half years." The Chairman further referred to Mr. Garcia as the author of valuable treatises on the vocal organ and on singing, and to Mrs. and Miss Garcia, who had graced the meeting by their presence. Mr. Garcia, in his interesting reply, claimed Scottish music and Scottish musicians as very old friends, and frankly admitted that the ballad was the siren that first drew his thoughts to the land of the mist and the rainbow. Dr. Macintyre, the eminent throat specialist, struck a sympathetic chord when he referred to one who, after such a long and honoured career, has been spared to see the outcome of his work spoken of as an every-day occurrence in the affairs of men. During the evening Miss Jenny Taggart and Mr. H. A. L. Seligmann sang with much acceptance, and instrumental solos were given by Messrs. Kosman, Halstead, and Benda. The gathering was in every respect memorable, and much interest centred around the references to the science of laryngoscopy, so prominently, of course, identified with its distinguished exponent.

On the 5th ult. a musical version of an old friend, "Cramond Brig," was produced at the Royal Princess's Theatre by Mr. Durward Lely's company. Some fine old Scotch airs have been resuscitated by Dr. John Greig, who has also provided several attractive melodies from his own pen; and if the initial performance was not entirely successful, "Holyrood," as the work is called in its new dress, is not by any means unattractive. On the following evening Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rieu, two recent accessions to the teaching staff of the Athenæum School of Music, made their Glasgow début. As a violinist, Mr. Rieu soon showed himself a master of his instrument, while his coadjutor won high praise by reason of her excellent soprano voice and her cultured method. The programme was mainly selected from modern composers.

Mr. Eugene d'Albert's Pianoforte Recital, on the 15th ult., did not exactly crowd St. Andrew's Hall. It was the accomplished pianist's first appearance in Glasgow—his native city, of course—certain droll ebullitions emitted in bygone days had not been forgotten, and while frankly admitting that these have nothing to do with Mr. d'Albert's position in the musical world, still they cannot be quite ignored. Be this as it may, the fact remains that the "bonnie laddie," who found many years ago congenial playground around our "Crescents," did not arouse the enthusiasm due to his exceptional attainments. He, however, appears at the first Concert of our Choral and Orchestral series (in Beethoven's E flat Concerto), and it ought then to be strange indeed should "auld acquaintance be forgot and never brought to mind." Mr. d'Albert's programme on the occasion under brief notice was on familiar lines. He was at his best in Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata; Chopin has been heard before now to better advantage in some respects.

The customary large audience greeted Madame Adelina Patti on the evening of the 19th ult., when the diva once more warbled certain very familiar ditties. On the following night Miss Margaret Currie, with the assistance of Miss Lindsay Currie (vocalist), gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Queen's Rooms, and on the 22nd ult. Dr. Richter and his Orchestra were announced to appear in St. Andrew's Hall.

The Greenock Choral Union's season begins on the 19th inst., with the first part of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and the same composer's "First Walpurgis Night." Later on Mr. Hoeck's excellent Society gives "The Messiah," MacCunn's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," and Stanford's "The Revenge." The council of the Paisley Choral Union announces a series of six Concerts, in co-operation with the Scottish Orchestra Company, Limited. Four of these Concerts will be orchestral, and during the season Mr. James Barr's well-equipped choir will be heard in the "Elijah" and in Handel's "Acis and Galatea."

The Largs Choral Society has taken in hand Anderton's "The Wreck of the Hesperus" and Handel's "Judas Maccabæus." Mr. Lewis N. Parker's cantata "Sylvia" is the work selected for study by the Milngavie Musical Association.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

If any fresh evidences were required as to the direction taken by musical tastes in this district, it was assuredly forthcoming on the 17th ult., when the Philharmonic Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity on the occasion of the first Ladies' Concert of the Liverpool Orchestral Society. It has now passed into history how Mr. A. E. Rodewald, an enthusiastic amateur, twelve years or so ago established what was then termed "the people's orchestra," and how, season after season, this organisation increased proportionately in numerical strength and artistic efficiency until at present its ranks include nearly one hundred performers, about half of whom are professional players. Careful rehearsal, under the skilful guidance of Mr. Rodewald, has had its latest result in the production of so important a work as Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, which was given on the occasion under notice with an admirable amount of finish. Other contributions to the programme were German's "Richard III." Overture, Berlioz's Hungarian March, and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, the latter being delightfully rendered by Mr. Brodsky.

An event round which gathered an equal amount of musical interest and personal sympathy was the first appearance of the Ross Brothers after a lengthy period of study at Berlin. Mr. Ross, sen., is one of the most deservedly respected of local professors, and his boys, who some years ago were regarded as youthful prodigies in this city, have now developed into conscientious artists of a very high order. Mr. Alfred Ross's tour de force was a Violin Concerto by Vieuxtemps, and his brother, Mr. Charles Ross, who was joined by a fellow-student, Mr. Moore, gave some remarkably clever samples of ensemble pianoforte playing. The Concert took place in St. George's Hall, on the 10th ult.

Three Orchestral Concerts have been given by the Sunday Society, the band under Mr. Argent having been increased to eighty performers. The Overtures "Rienzi" and "Flying Dutchman" (Wagner), "Athalie" and "Ruy Blas" (Mendelssohn), and the well-known "Zampa" of Herold have been given with other selections.

The Società Armonica has been placed under the conductorship of M. Vasco Akeroyd, a professional musician having thus for the first time during many years past been elected to the important post, and the wisdom of such a step is beyond all question in view of some previous efforts of this time-honoured Society. The Birkenhead Cambrian Choral Society, which has a successful record of work, has likewise engaged a professional conductor, Dr. Reynolds, and upon this departure all concerned are to be congratulated. It is stated that a series of Subscription Concerts will be given this season, and there certainly ought to be room for such a course in Birkenhead, since the recent suspension of those performances, which began more than a quarter of a century ago with the Wirral Philharmonic Society, under the late Samuel Percival, and which had for so long a period an honourable, if latterly a chequered career.

The Wallasey Musical Society has taken in hand Handel's "Messiah," with the view of giving it at Christmas time. At Warrington, the Musical Society is rehearsing Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise"; at Runcorn, the local choristers, claiming a similar title, have taken in hand Handel's "Messiah," and the Newton Society are rehearsing Romberg's "Lay of the Bell." The three latter organisations remain under the conductorship of Mr. F. H. Crossley. At Southport, the Philharmonic Society is preparing Handel's "Israel" and "Messiah" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend," under Mr. H. Hudson, while the local Choral Society is at work on Mendelssohn's "Elijah," under Mr. J. Clarke. Two Societies at Wigan are also practising Handel's "Messiah," and a select class at the newly established Music School is rehearsing Stanford's "Revenge."

The Best memorial has at last fulfilled the desires of its promoters, and a bust of the organist has been permanently placed near the seat which he for so long a period occupied in St. George's Hall. The presentment of Mr. W. T. Best, executed by Mr. Conrad Dressler, is a faithful one, and it was formally unveiled on the 20th ult., in the presence of a considerable gathering of citizens, by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, the Right Hon. Earl of Derby, K.G.

The National Convention of Tonic Sol-faists took place in Liverpool in the latter days of September and was well attended. Addresses were delivered and papers read by Sir Edward Russell, Messrs. J. S. Curwen, Robert Griffiths, Sydney Hardcastle, W. T. Samuel, Granville E. Humphreys, Fred. H. Burstall, W. S. Woods, F. Royle, W. Docksey, W. I. Argent, W. Harding Bonner, Henry Coward, Filmer Rook, Eleazar Roberts, Hurren Harding, D. W. Evans, and other representative musicians from various parts of the Kingdom.

The first Concert of the fifty-eighth season of the Philharmonic Society found the resident forces in the best possible working order. As previously stated, the chorus has but little to do at these performances, except on four occasions each year, beyond a few part-songs or other light work, but the brief selection thus given on the 13th ult. gave pleasure to all concerned. It is upon the orchestra that the fame of the Society has been built, and the performance of Beethoven's Symphony (No. 7) in A was fully up to the best possible traditions. Mr. F. H. Cowen, whose popularity among all classes in Liverpool is now firmly assured, directed the Concert, and received a most cordial greeting. The Overtures were Wagner's "Rienzi" and Mozart's "Figaro," and Mackenzie's Courante from "Ravenswood" was also included in the scheme. A notable feature, both from a personal and musical point of view, was the appearance of Lady Hallé, who played Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and the invitation of the committee thus extended to and happily accepted by the widow of the late conductor of the Society formed matter for the most congratulatory and kindly comment. For the 27th ult. the second Concert of the season was announced, with a Haydn Symphony as the leading feature.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

We are still in a state of expectancy rather than of actual enjoyment. The prospects are increasingly bright; but only in the last few evenings of this waning month of October will the nearest of them be realised. Dr. Watson has, however, commenced his season with the Vocal Society, the longest number in the programme of the 14th ult. being the melodious little cantata which Goring Thomas constructed upon such vague outlines to words strung together with ill-defined purpose from all sorts of sources. But "The Swan and the Skylark" will not affect the reputation of the ill-fated composer of "Nadeshda," a work so full of promise most unhappily left unfulfilled.

To the announcements which I have previously recorded must be appended that of intended performances of chamber music by Mr. Max Mayer, to which will, doubtless, be added some by Mr. E. Sachs and his friends; and of the resuming of the excellently planned programmes of the Schiller Anstalt, under the direction of Mr. Carl Fuchs, and the wholly admirable and most finished performances of Mr. Brodsky and his colleagues at the Royal College of Music, to which institution a large number of new pupils has this term been admitted. The musical graduates of the University also are becoming numerous, and to the classes held by Dr. Hiles many earnest students are being attracted.

Messrs. Smith, Sons and Co. announce a series of four Concerts, at the Free Trade Hall, on the 4th inst., December 16, January 20, and February 24. A large number of eminent artists are engaged to appear.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The sixth annual meeting of the Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society was held in Newcastle-on-Tyne on September 30. It was stated that the funds in hand now amount to £341 9s. 6d., and that during the past year it has not been necessary to make any grants to members. The Society, which was founded some six years ago, with Sir A. C. Mackenzie as president, for the purpose of assisting local musicians in times of sickness and distress, deserves support.

The Rev. Frank Walters, who was present at the recent Wagner Festival at Bayreuth, commenced, on Wednesday, the 21st ult., a series of six Lectures on "The Myths and Legends of Wagner's Dramas," in the Grand Assembly Rooms, Newcastle. The remaining lectures will be given on the five following Wednesday evenings.

On the 16th ult. the first two parts of Haydn's "Creation" were performed, with the assistance of members of the Gateshead Choral Society, in St. George's Church, Jesmond, the occasion being the celebration of the eighth anniversary of the consecration of the church.

Dr. Rea's Amateur Vocal Society has resumed its rehearsals during the past month, the work put into practice being Cherubini's Fourth Mass.

Mr. Eugene d'Albert gave a Pianoforte Recital in Olympia, Newcastle, on the 2nd ult., before a fairly large and exceedingly enthusiastic audience. It was as Northumberland Scholar that Mr. d'Albert entered the National Training School of Music—now the Royal College of Music—some twenty years ago, and his youthful days were chiefly spent in Newcastle.

The first of the Harrison Concerts—of which four will be given during the season—took place in Olympia, Newcastle, on the 26th ult., when Madame Adelina Patti was the centre of attraction.

The first Concert of the seventeenth season of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society was announced to take place in the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle, on the 29th ult., for which occasion a string quartet, consisting of Señor Arbos, Mr. Inwards, Mr. Hobday, and Mr. Ludwig, was engaged, with Mr. David Bispham as vocalist.

The committee of the Sunderland Philharmonic Society has issued its prospectus for the coming season. Two Concerts only are announced in place of the customary three. At the first of these, on the 3rd inst., Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given, with Miss Alice Esty, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies as principals; and for the second Concert, on March 2, the programme will include Gade's "Crusaders," Beethoven's dramatic chorus "A calm sea and prosperous voyage," Macfarren's cantata "May Day," and Dvorák's Te Deum (Op. 103) for soprano and bass soli and chorus. The artists on this occasion will be Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. David Hughes. In addition to these Concerts a Christmas performance of "The Messiah" is talked about.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union's arrangements for the season also include a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," which will be given in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 17th inst., with Miss Mabel Berrey, Madame L. Dews, Mr. N. McLeod Jones, and Mr. Andrew Black in the principal parts. The second Concert will take place on April 8, when Brahms's German Requiem will be performed, with Miss Marie Fillunger and Mr. Douglas Powell as soloists. A Christmas performance of "The Messiah" will be given, on December 23, as an extra Concert, with Miss Maggie Purvis, Madame Helen Berry, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. John Browning as principals.

The Sunderland Chamber Music Society announces its intention of giving three Concerts during the season, the first to take place at the end of this month.

The South Shields Choral Society will give Handel's "Acis and Galatea," on Wednesday, December 2, with Mrs. Helen Trust, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. David Hughes as principals. For its second Concert, early in the year, Sullivan's "Golden Legend" is mentioned.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company commenced a week's engagement at the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle, on the 26th ult.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. Barlow is to be congratulated upon the excellent programmes he is arranging for the Meakin Popular Concerts.

On the 5th ult. the eighth season was opened at the renovated Victoria Hall. Every seat was occupied in the large hall, and, by the unstinted applause accorded, popular testimony was strongly shown. The Risegari Quartet (Messrs. Risegari, John Nicholls, Speelman, and Henry Smith) was responsible for the instrumental pieces, while Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Rosa Green, Mr. David Bispham, and Mr. Whitney Mockridge contributed the vocal music. Mr. Sherratt was the accompanist.

The annual meeting of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society was held on the 14th ult Mr. C. Heath presided and there was a good muster of members. Mr. S. M. Weatherby presented the secretarial report, from which we find that five guineas had been voted to the Howson Memorial Fund, and that after paying all liabilities the balance in hand stands at £208 15s. 7d., being an increase of £34 14s. 4d. upon the year's working. Mr. Alderman Charlesworth succeeds the late Mr. Howson as president and Mr. Shipley becomes financial hon. sec. Mr. Garner and Mr. Weatherby continue as conductor and hon. sec. respectively.

Mr. J. A. MacGregor (of Burslem) has been requested to reconstitute the Choral Society for this formerly active centre in musical matters. A strong committee is being formed.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The first Sheffield Musical Festival has come and gone, and nothing now remains but congratulations on its admitted success, delightful memories of its four memorable Concerts, and a fixed determination that the event shall become a triennial fixture. The melting power of music has received ample proof in this the first important musical venture in the cutlery capital. The "man from Sheffield" is painted by outsiders as a very hard-headed, close-pocketed individual. Certain it is that he, with true Yorkshire shrewdness, likes to have his money's worth; but give him a prospect of a fair bargain and he parts with his money willingly. The Festival had a business-like look about it from the first. The guarantee fund, liberally headed by the Mayor (the Duke of Norfolk), soon reached the sum of £5,000. There was a rush for tickets for every Concert, and at the end posters had to be issued stating that every ticket was sold. The result is that an initial venture, wherein success, musical and financial, was problematical, has attained both, and the nucleus of a fund for future Festivals has been well established. With such a result on record no wonder Sheffield is elated. Two points call for special comment. One is the splendid singing of the voluntary chorus, and the other the excellence of the general arrangements. The first is due partly to the thorough training of Dr. Coward and partly to the fact that South Yorkshire possesses sufficient vocal material to stock a dozen Festival choruses. The second is the outcome of a wise admixture of musical and commercial men on the committees. Hard work by everybody connected with the affair and the possession of an ideal honorary secretary in Mr. E. Willoughby Firth are two of the most important factors in the gratifying success that has been won.

Mr. August Manns, who has quite won the hearts of his choristers, expressed himself so delighted with the work done by them that he promised to each lady of the chorus a signed portrait of himself. His forces were delighted with his intelligible system of beating. Particularly struck were they by his method of signing for soft singing by putting his grouped fingers to his lips. During his stay in Sheffield he was interviewed several times, his happiest remark being "The snow of winter may be on my head, but the flowers of spring are in my heart."

Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was performed on the 9th ult., at the Parish Church, Sheffield, under the direction of Mr. T. W. Hanforth, the organist and choirmaster. Band and chorus numbered about 140 performers. Mr. G. A. Douglas was organist and Mr. F. W. Gadsby led the orchestra.

The Sheffield Choral Union (Mr. S. Suckley, conductor) announces Concert performances of Auber's opera "Masaniello," "The Messiah," and probably Gounod's "Redemption."

The Sheffield Musical Union announces a performance of Dr. Parry's "Job," under Dr. H. Coward.

The Amateur Instrumental Society (Dr. H. Coward, conductor) announces three Concerts, at the first of which Raff's "Leonora" Symphony will be played.

The first Harrison Concert took place in the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on the 23rd ult. In consequence of a severe chill, caught at Bradford on the 21st, Madame Patti was unable to sing. Mr. Harrison's explanation and fair offers were cheerfully accepted by the audience.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical season in Salisbury may be said to have commenced on the 22nd ult., with the Concert of the Test Valley Musical Society. On this occasion the string orchestra as well as the chorus, numbering in all 180 performers, consisted entirely of amateurs, the large majority of the instrumentalists being ladies. Miss Margaret Barter, a young lady with a well-trained voice and pleasing manner, and Mr. W. Anstice were the principal vocalists. Miss Dorothea Tucker played Wilhelmj's arrangement of Bach's Air in C major as a violin solo. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Miss Stephens, and Mr. E. H. Moberly conducted. The Concert, unfortunately, took place too late for detailed notice.

The Trowbridge Musical Union, of which Mr. H. Millington is the conductor, proposes to give three Concerts during the season. At the first Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed, followed at Christmas by "The Messiah." Costa's "Eli" will be reserved for the spring Concert.

The Chippenham Harmonic Society is at work upon Haydn's oratorio the "Creation," which will be given at the next Concert.

The Southampton Philharmonic Society re-assembled for practice on the 5th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. H. M. Pike. One of the chief works chosen for the coming season is Gounod's "Messe Solennelle." The Amateur Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Charles Fletcher is president and Mr. E. Moon, conductor, commences the winter with several new members, and has already in preparation compositions by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Wagner, Cowen, &c. Mr. E. Jones has been re-elected leader. Miss Alice Ivimey announces a series of four Chamber Concerts, to be given during the season at the Philharmonic Hall, of which more particulars next month.

An attempt is being made by the Southern Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians to establish the Bournemouth Musical Festival upon a permanent basis. The Corporation has been approached by the representatives of the Section upon the subject, but whether the co-operation of that body will be secured is, at the time of writing, undecided. A very successful Concert was given on the 8th ult., in the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, by Mr. Duncan Hume and the members of his choir. Eaton

Faning's "Song of the Vikings" and Vincent's Choral Fantasia on National Songs were included in the programme, which was further contributed to by Madame Newling, Miss Effie Walden, Mr. Charles Fletcher, and others. The Boscombe Philharmonic Society has resumed its weekly practices; Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" is the work put into rehearsal. Dr. Thomas will again officiate as conductor. A new Choral and Orchestral Society has been organised at Westbourne, under the direction of Mr. William Lee. Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day" has been selected as the first work to be studied. The Wimborne Choral Society (conductor, Mr. H. J. Eaton) is at work upon Sir John Stainer's cantata "The Daughter of Jairus."

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Any account of music in Yorkshire must at this moment be more in the nature of a forecast than of a retrospect, seeing that the season has only just begun. Still, there are a few Concerts already to be chronicled. At Bradford and Leeds the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company has been furnishing a large share of last month's music, and has introduced for the first time in these towns Wagner's "Meistersinger" (which had, however, been heard at Bradford in Italian) and "Die Walküre," and Godard's "Vivandière." Whether simply from their novelty or for some hitherto unexpressed interest in Wagner's music, the two music-dramas attracted enormous audiences to the Leeds Theatre and were, with the unavoidable drawbacks of an insufficient orchestra and of wholesale cuts, given in a more than creditable manner.

Another operatic novelty was furnished to Bradford by the visit of the "Shamus O'Brien" Company at the end of September. Mr. Joseph O'Mara retained his original part of Mike Murphy, and Mr. Magrath also appeared, though in a fresh rôle, that of the hero, which suited him well. The rest of the cast differed from that of the London production, but left nothing to be desired, singing and acting with the utmost spirit. Indeed, the work as a whole seemed to go with almost more vivacity than at the Opera Comique. Mr. Kreuz conducted very ably.

On the 14th ult. the Leeds Philharmonic gave the first of a long series of "Elijah" jubilee performances with which the West Riding is to be flooded this autumn. Madame Duma, Miss Sarah Berry (who sang remarkably well), and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Watkin Mills formed the cast of principals, and the chorus sang with more than usual refinement under Mr. Beyschlag's conductorship. On the 17th ult. the Leeds Permanent Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Alfred Benton, opened its second season, giving portions of Mr. H. Bunning's graceful Village Suite, and on the 20th the first of Dr. Richter's provincial Concerts took place at Leeds, when Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" formed the chief features of a very interesting programme, and of a series of performances that must have opened the eyes of Leeds people as to what a really great conductor can accomplish.

At Bradford the Messrs. Harrison, of Birmingham, have instituted a series of light miscellaneous Concerts, by artists of the first rank. By way of making a brilliant start, Madame Patti appeared at the first of the series, on the 21st ult., and proved as great an attractive force as ever. More modest, but artistically of no less moment, are the Chamber Concerts of the Bradford Harmony Society, the first of which took place on September 30, when Mr. Brodsky appeared as violinist, and played in really masterly style in Sonatas by Beethoven and Grieg, the pianoforte part being taken by Mr. Sigmund Oppenheim. Miss Steger was the vocalist. At Huddersfield the Subscription Concerts are so numerous that a very early start has to be made with them. As early as September 22 the band of the Royal Engineers, under Mr. Sommer, gave a popular programme, Mr. Barton McGuckin singing several songs; and on the 6th ult. Madame Moody and a concert-party were heard in a Concert, the major part of which was given up to a "costume recital" of Gounod's "Philemon et Baucis," with pianoforte accompaniment. Of much greater importance was the third Concert, on the 20th ult., when Mr. Reisenauer was the pianist and Miss Irma Sethe the violinist, both artists being new to Huddersfield. On this occasion Madame Albani was the vocalist, so it need not be said that the performances were of an exceptionally high standard of merit all round. On the 13th ult. the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave a Concert of part-songs, madrigals, and the like, under Mr. Ibeson's conductorship; and on the 16th ult. the Huddersfield Choral Society gave Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with Madame Ella Russell, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Watkin Mills as principals. Mr. John Bowling conducted.

As regards the outlook for the rest of the season, it has never been brighter, if the number of Concerts planned be any criterion. The "Elijah" performances by the important societies at Leeds and Huddersfield have already received notice. In addition to these the jubilee of the oratorio will be celebrated in similar fashion at Bradford, Halifax, Dewsbury, Batley, and Middlesbrough, with probably not a few towns that have escaped our notice.

Among the more interesting things promised by the Yorkshire choral societies are Schumann's "Scenes from Faust" (Part III.) and some of Schubert's works, in commemoration of his centenary, by the Leeds Philharmonic Society; a Mendelssohn programme by the new Leeds Society, the Choral Union; Tinel's "St. Francis" at the Bradford Subscription Concerts; Dr. Parry's "King Saul" by the Bradford Festival Choral Society, and Mr. Randegger's "Fridolin" by the Old Bradford Society. Then the Bradford Permanent Orchestra has given — too late for notice in this issue—Professor Stanford's Norwich work "Phaudrig Crohoore," as part of a "Stanford programme," conducted by the composer himself. So it will be seen Bradford is alive to the claims of contemporary art. No less so is the Dewsbury Society, which celebrates its own jubilee in March with a programme including Dr. Parry's Leeds cantata "Invocation to Music," his "Blest Pair of Sirens," and Mr. German's Leeds Suite, both composers appearing to conduct each his own work. Huddersfield has nothing more out of the way than "Samson," but Halifax is preparing Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," Schubert's "Miriam's Song," and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens." At Keighley, the Musical Union promises a resurrection of Sir George Macfarren's "King David," which has not been heard for many years. The little Bramley Society is well up to date, a performance of Mr. Elgar's Worcester cantata, "The Light of Life," being promised. The York Society, of which Canon Hudson has just been appointed conductor, is attempting Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," which would seem just now to be as popular as it deserves. At Hull, the Harmonic Society promises Costa's "Eli," a revival as singular as that of Macfarren's work. The Middlesbrough Musical Union, always enterprising, is arranging for a Concert performance of Schumann's "Manfred" music, with Mr. Charles Fry as reciter of an abridged version of the poem. Cowen's "Rose Maiden" is promised at Whitby, and the same composer's "St. John's Eve" at Ilkley. The Bridlington Society, which always aims high, is preparing Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." When we have added to this long list of works all the more familiar oratorios, such as "Messiah," "Judas," "St. Paul," "Golden Legend," and the like, that are to be given during the season, it will be seen how much choral music the county has in store for it. Of the Orchestral and Chamber Concerts, too, there will be no stint, so far as the larger towns are concerned; but space will not permit of even as brief a summary of these as has been given to the choral societies.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The festivities in connection with the visit of the Russian Imperial couple have retarded the activity here in matters musical, which, so far as the earlier part of last month is concerned, may be said to have been confined almost entirely to the performance of the Russian National Hymn. Particulars of the gala representation at the Opéra, at the Théâtre Français, and the entertainment at Versailles will be found in another column.

Some important modifications are about to be made n the teaching staff of the Conservatoire, which will have an interesting and significant bearing upon the future of this Government Institution. In accordance with the decree of September 29, 1895, the Conservatoire is governed by a superior Council of Instruction, consisting of artistic committees and the members of the Ministry of Fine Arts. The Council met on the 14th ult. for the purpose of making fresh nominations in the room of M. Dubois, the new director of the Institution; of M. Massenet, who has resigned, as well as of MM. Delahaye, Garcin, and Danhauser. As the result of the voting, M. Widor is designated for the chair of M. Dubois (composition); MM. Fauré and Ch. Lefebvre, ex æquo, for that of M. Massenet (composition); M. Vidal for the class of accompaniment; M. Rémy for that of violin, and M. de Martini for a vocal class. Thus the Minister of Fine Arts, in making the appointment, will have to choose between M. Fauré and M. Ch. Lefebvre, who represent totally different artistic standpoints; the latter, a former laureate of the Prix de Rome, representing the traditions of the Institution, while M. Fauré belongs to the advanced modern school, and has made his studies at the Ecole Niedermeyer. M. Widor also, although he has a class for organ playing at the Conservatoire, has not been a pupil there. It will be seen then that these nominations are not without considerable significance as affecting our musical community.

There is some idea at the Opéra of a revival of "Les Huguenots," but in any case it will not be realised until after the production of M. Bruneau's "Messidor." Meanwhile, performances are taking place of "Tannhäuser," "Hamlet," "Faust," "Hellé," and other works now in the répertoire.

At the Opéra Comique the date of the expected interesting revival of "Don Giovanni" has not yet been fixed, and the distribution of the cast, with the exception of MM. Maurel and Fugère, remains still uncertain. Performances here have been confined to "La Fille du Regiment," "Mignon," "Il Barbiere," and similar old acquaintances. The moment for launching out upon novelties has, as will be gathered from the above, not yet arrived.

M. Lamoureux announced the opening of his season on the 18th ult., with a Popular Festival Concert. In his orchestra, M. Dressen takes the place of M. Salmon as solo violoncello and M. Capet that of M. Houfflack as solo violin. M. Colonne's Concerts were to re-commence on the 25th ult.

The Polish violinist, M. Stanilas Barcewiz, made his appearance recently at one of the Concerts held at the Theatrical and Musical Exhibition, and, despite the wretched acoustic conditions of the immense hall, scored a complete success. Among the exhibits here, one of great interest is a collection of tuning-forks of Messrs. Pleyel and Wolff, illustrating the ascending tendency of the tonality from the year 1700 to 1855. Very curious are the No. 1, emanating from the period of Louis XIV., in 1700, and representing the pitch established by Sauveur, and the No. 2, which gives the la of the orchestra of Louis XVI., in 1780. M. Tolbecque, a violoncellist who has devoted himself for a considerable time past to the art of constructing stringed instruments, exhibits quite a series of remarkable reproductions, upon the authority of literary descriptions, engravings, bas-reliefs, &c., of curious ancient instruments, such as the lyras of the fifth, sixth, and eighth centuries B.C. Several specimens of these reconstructions of M. Tolbecque have already been acquired by the Museum in Brussels.

M. Saint-Saëns has just returned from a most successful concert tour, in his capacity of organ virtuoso, in Switzerland. M. Widor, on the other hand, is expected in Moscow on the 16th ult. to conduct his Second Symphony.

Mr. Charles Fry has prepared a most interesting selection of incidental music for his series of Recitals with Miss Olive Kennett, which take place on the 27th inst. and December 4 and 12, at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The selections include some new orchestral music by Arthur Fox for Shakespeare's "As you like it"; John E. West's effective music, recently heard at the Promenade Concerts, to Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily"; Clement Locknane's music to Shakespeare's "Macbeth"; two movements from F. H. Cowen's set of Four English Dances, and Schumann's music to a scene from Byron's "Manfred." Two of the part-songs to be sung in "As you like it"—"Under the greenwood tree," by H. W. Wareing, and "It was a lover and his lass," by A. H. Brewer—will be heard in London for the first time. The music is to be executed by a newly-formed select choir and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. William A. Gardner; an assurance of its being effectively rendered will be found in Mr. Fry's knowledge of and sympathy with musical art.

Mrs. Paula Plowitz-Cavour, at her Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 22nd ult., was content to make only two contributions to the programme. These were the air from "Jephtha," "In gentle murmurs," and Löwe's "Die Uhr," both of which she sang with refinement, though it seemed strange to hear the Handelian piece in German. Mdlle. Irma Sethe, the violinist, completely mastered the difficulties of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor, and was heard to even greater advantage in a Lullaby by L. H. Hillier and the Airs Russes of Wieniawski. Herr Alfred Reisenauer played pianoforte compositions by Chopin, Moszkowsky, and Liszt, especially distinguishing himself in one of the Hungarian Rhapsodies of the last-named. Violoncello solos were rendered in excellent style by Miss May Campbell Taylor. The vocalists, besides the Concert-giver, were Mr. Alfred Adams (a new-comer, who judiciously employs a light tenor voice), Mrs. Montague Fordham, and the Misses Tomson.

The British Chamber Music Concerts (third season), under the direction of Mr. Ernest Fowles, will be given at the Queen's (Small) Hall on the 4th and 18th inst. and December 8 and 16. The following works by British composers will be performed: Sonata in D for pianoforte and violin (Op. 11), C. V. Stanford; Quartet for pianoforte and strings in E flat, A. C. Mackenzie; Trio in C minor for pianoforte, violin, and clarinet (first time), R. H. Walthew; Theme and nineteen Variations in D minor for pianoforte, C. H. H. Parry; Trio in A for pianoforte and strings (Op. 88, first time), Algernon Ashton; String Quartet in G minor (first time), Joseph Speaight; Quintet for pianoforte and strings in C, Gerard F. Cobb; Fantasiestücke for strings (Op. 5), S. Coleridge Taylor; Quintet for pianoforte and strings in G minor, G. A. Macfarren; Sonata in B flat for pianoforte and viola (No. 2, first time), Leonard Fowles.

Lincoln is to be congratulated on the formation of a choral society, under the presidency of the Very Rev. the Dean, and with Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of the Cathedral, as conductor. Rehearsals have been commenced with 200 voices, and the first Concert is announced for December 8. The programme on this occasion will comprise Mendelssohn's "Athalie," "The Dream of Eugene Aram," with the incidental music written by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Edward German's Dances to "Henry VIII." Madame Clara Samuell will be the principal vocalist, Mr. Charles Fry has been engaged for the first-named works, and there will be a specially engaged full orchestra. Dr. Bennett is also making endeavours to establish a permanent orchestral society in Lincoln, in which it is to be hoped he will be successful.

Miss Susetta Fenn gave her eighth evening Concert, at Brixton Hall, on the 16th ult., assisted by Madame Clara Samuell, Miss Emma Fenn, Mr. Sinclair Dunn, Mr. Frank Swinford, Mr. James Budd, Miss Annie Burghes, Miss Dell Thompson, Mr. W. L. Barrett, and the members of the St. George's Glee Union. Miss Fenn's most successful effort was Braga's "Serenata," with violin obbligato played by Major-General Stephens. Mr. J. P. Attwater acted as accompanist.

The annual Harvest Festival was held at Eccleston Square Church on September 27. Mr. H. A. Evans, organist of the church, and Miss U. C. Gross were at the organ, assisted by a trio of strings led by Mr. Wylie Price.

Three Recitals are announced by Herr Michael Balling and Mr. Carl Weber at the Queen's (Small) Hall, to introduce the Ritter Viola-Alta, on Wednesday afternoons, the 28th ult. and the 4th and 11th inst.

The musical prospectus of the Winter Gardens at Bournemouth speaks well for the enterprise and good taste of its promoters, and also for the artistic appreciation of the Borough. Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun., the musical director, invites subscription to a series of sixty Symphony Concerts, to be given during the winter on Mondays and Thursdays. It is pleasant also to find that Mr. Godfrey remembers the claims of British musicians, and to notice, amongst the long list of composers whose overtures, symphonies, and other works are to be performed, the names of Sterndale Bennett, Mackenzie, MacCunn, German, and Cowen. The orchestra consists of thirty-five performers, and each programme contains one or more overtures and an entire symphony, while a concerto with orchestra will be given every Monday.

The Musical Guild will give four Concerts of Chamber Music (fifteenth series) in the Town Hall, Kensington. The first was announced to take place on the 27th ult., and the others will be given on the 10th and 24th inst. and December 8. The following works will be performed during the series: Schubert's Octet (strings and wind), Coleridge Taylor's Clarinet Quintet (new), Mozart's String Quintet in C, Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A major, Beethoven's String Quartet in F (Op. 59), Beethoven's String Quartet in A major (Op. 18), Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in G minor, A. Davidson Arnott's Pianoforte Trio in A major (new), Robert Kahn's Violin Sonata in G minor, Op. 5 (new), T. T. Noble's Suite for pianoforte and violin in A major (new).

The thirteenth season of the Hampstead Popular Concerts of Chamber Music will consist of a series of six Concerts, on Friday evenings, at the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, on the following dates: The 20th inst., December 4, 18, February 12, 26, and March 12. Dr. Joachim will again be the leading violinist at the last Concert, and Messrs. Gompertz and Ludwig will lead alternately at the others as before. The pianists will be Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Ilona Eibenschütz, Miss C. Kleeberg, Madame Haas, and Mr. Leonard Borwick; and the vocalists, Madame Gomez, Miss Fillunger, Mr. Walter Ford, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Meux, and Mr. Henschel. Mr. Bird will be the accompanist.

Madame Amina Goodwin and Madame Lilian Griffiths gave an attractive Chamber Concert on the 21st ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The programme contained Arensky's effective Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 32) and the first performance in London of Nicodé's Sonata in G (Op. 25) for pianoforte and violoncello, which proved an interesting work. In the first of the above the Concert-givers received able assistance from Mr. Squire, who also took part with Madame Amina Goodwin in Nicodé's Sonata. Several solos were effectively played by the above-mentioned ladies, and some songs were sung with taste by Mr. Edwin Wareham.

Mr. Ernest Meads gave a Dramatic Recital at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 22nd ult., the programme of which included so much music that it might fairly have been called a Concert with Recitations. Among other pieces Mr. Meads recited, for the first time, "The Legend beautiful" and "Young Lochinvar," with music by Mr. Stanley Hawley (accompanied by the composer), in the latter of which he was specially successful. Mr. Meads's humorous pieces were also much appreciated. The reciter was assisted by Miss Marie Newland and Mr. Faithful Pearce (vocalists), Miss Ada Boden (pianist), and Miss Kate Ould (violoncellist).

Mr. A. Montague Borwell, who gave a Concert on the 23rd ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, possesses a pleasant baritone voice, which he uses with good taste, and his renderings of Gounod's "O that we two were maying," and other songs, met with much acceptance from a numerous audience. He received assistance from the Misses Clara Osmond, Eldina Bligh, and May Taylor, who played Dvorák's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 21), and also contributed several solos on their respective instruments. Miss Adèle Gray also made a fairly successful first appearance in England as a vocalist.

Miss Julie Geyer gave a farewell Pianoforte Recital, on the 22nd ult., at Clavier Hall, Hanover Square. Miss Geyer's playing shows in a remarkable manner what may be accomplished by diligent practice on the instrument designed by Mr. Virgil, and her numerous performances in this country have been heard by a large number of interested listeners. Her last programme contained a selection from old and modern masters well calculated to display her great abilities, and pleasing variety was obtained by Miss Kate Chaplin's admirable renderings of violoncello pieces by Bach and Lalo.

The offer of £20 made by a generous amateur for the best Quintet for flute, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and pianoforte, or Septet or Octet for pianoforte, strings, and wind, will doubtless set many students' pens to work. The judges are Drs. Villiers Stanford, Charles Wood, and G. J. Bennett, and the conditions of competition may be obtained from Dr. Yorke Trotter, 22, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. The procedure may be recommended to the attention of other lovers of this branch of the art, which would doubtless thereby gain many attractive examples of chamber music.

An instructive Lecture on "Musical Form" was given on the 17th ult., by Mr. Charles Williams, at Messrs. Broadwood's Concert-room. The lecturer's remarks were admirably illustrated by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Gwendolyn Toms, and Messrs. Jasper Sutcliffe, Ernest Tomlinson, and Squire, the chief works analysed and performed being Brahms's Intermezzo in E minor, from the pianoforte pieces (Op. 119), and this composer's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25.) Mr. Williams will begin a series of these Lectures, on the 4th inst., at St. Martin's Town Hall.

The bust of the late Sir Joseph Barnby, which has been purchased out of the Royal Choral Society's "Barnby Memorial Fund," has now been completed, and was to be uncovered at the close of the choir rehearsal, in the Albert Hall, on the 26th ult. The total amount subscribed is £232 8s., and after paying for the bust, pedestal, and other expenses, there will remain about £110 to be handed to the "Barnby Memorial Trust Fund," for the benefit of the children.

The Westminster Orchestral Society will give Concerts on Wednesday evenings, December 16, March 31, and June 2. At the first of these the programme will include Mendelssohn's Overture "The Hebrides," L. Schütt's Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Llewela Davies; a Romance for violin and orchestra, by Stewart Macpherson; and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. Mr. Stewart Macpherson will again be the conductor.

Dr. C. J. Frost is giving a series of six Bach Recitals on the organ in the Central Hall of the Goldsmith's Institute, on Thursday evenings. The first of these took place on the 15th ult., when the programme included Præludium and Fuga in C major, Sonata in E flat, Pastorale in F major, and Concerto (No. 1) in G. He was assisted by Miss L. Whitley (vocalist) and Miss Nellie Clayton (violinist).

The Harvest Thanksgiving Services at St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, were held on the 4th ult. The Mass at the solemn celebration was Gounod's "St. Cecilia." After the evening service, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was excellently rendered by the choir. Mr. W. M. Wait (organist and choirmaster) presided at the organ and gave an Organ Recital before Evensong.

An interesting Concert of Schumann's music was given by Mr. J. W. Ivimey, at the South-West London Polytechnic Institute, on the 17th ult. The programme included the Phantasiestücke, solos for pianoforte (Mr. John Ivimey), violin (Mr. Joseph Ivimey), and violoncello (Miss Kemp-Welsh), and songs by Miss Louie Lowe and Miss Constance Barber.

An excellent programme has been prepared for the fifth annual Music Competition promoted by the Isle of Man Fine Art and Industrial Guild. The meeting will take place on March 25 next, and the number and character of the prizes offered testify to faith in the musical activity and abilities of the islanders, to whom competition is restricted.

At the invitation of Professor Bridge, Sir Arthur Sullivan has been invited to conduct the performance of his "Golden Legend," by the Royal Choral Society, on the 19th inst. Sir Arthur is now rarely seen as a conductor in London, and his appearance will, no doubt, impart additional interest to this performance of his popular work.

The Gresham Lectures by Professor Bridge (details of which will be found in our advertisement columns) will be delivered this term at Gresham College, and not at the City of London School, owing to the temporary engagement of the Hall in this Institution. The first will be given on the 10th inst.

The Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah" in St Matthew's Church, Stepney, on the 15th ult. The soloists were Madame Campbell Perugini, Miss Rina Robinson, Mr. James Leylands, and Mr. Swabey Russell. Mr. Herbert Cooke accompanied on the organ.

The twelfth season of the St. Peter's Choral Society will commence on the 24th inst., at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, with Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." Berlioz's "Faust" will be given on February 23, and Spohr's "Last Judgment" with Rossini's "Stabat Mater" on April 6. There will also be a Members' Concert on May 10.

The sixth season of Concerts of the Chicago Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Theodore Thomas, at the Auditorium, was announced to commence on the 23rd ult. The season will consist of twenty-two Matinées, on Fridays at 2.30 p.m., and twenty-two evening Concerts, on Saturdays at 8.15 p.m.

The Temple Orchestral Society is about to change its name and become "The Inns of Court Orchestral Society." By so doing it will enlarge its sphere of action and render eligible members of Lincoln's Inn and Gray's Inn. Harmony amongst lawyers is always to be commended.

New organs have been erected by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard at the Parish Church, Great Ormesby (opened by Dr. F. Bates on September 25), and St. John's Church, Woodbridge (opened by Dr. Bunnett on the 15th ult.).

Signor Emilio Pizzi has just completed another one-act opera, entited "La Rosalba," the libretto by Signor Illica, which, like his "Gabriella," is intended, in the first place, for Madame Patti's private theatre at Craig-y-Nos.

The competition for the John Thomas Welsh Scholarship took place at the Royal Academy of Music, on September 28, when the scholarship was awarded to Kate Williams. Edith Marian Owen was highly commended.

The Harvest Festival at the Church of St. Alphage, London Wall, took place on the 18th ult. A short Organ Recital by Mr. Arthur C. Tattersall (organist and choirmaster) was given after the evening service.

A new feature, interesting to musical students, in the educational session at Toynbee Hall this year will be the establishment of an Orchestral Society for the practice of compositions by Bach and Handel.

Harvest Festival Services were held at Christ Church, West Green, South Tottenham, on the 1st ult., and continued on the following Sunday. Mr. A. M. Flack, organist and choirmaster, presided at the organ.

The Bridlington Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. Bosville, has in rehearsal Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," Bach's "God's time is the best," and Dvorák's "The Spectre's Bride."

Mr. Ernest Newton has been appointed musical director of the London County Council Musical Society.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has been pleased to accept a copy of Signor Arditi's "Reminiscences."

Mr. E. Mason, of Arbroath, has been appointed conductor of the Carnoustie Choral Union.

Mr. F. Brient has been appointed chorus-master to the St. Faith's Choral Society, Stepney.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Antwerp.—M. Jan Blockx's new opera "Herbergprincess" was produced for the first time at the Flemish Theatre, on the 10th ult., with complete success. The music, while, almost as a matter of course, showing the influence of Wagner, frequently introduces a national element with happy results.

Barcelona.—An important orchestral work from the pen of Señor Tomas Breton, the distinguished operatic composer, was produced for the first time at a recent Concert of the Euterpe Society, under the direction of Señor Goula, with great success. It is an orchestral suite in four parts, entitled respectively "Bolero," "Pologitano," "Marcha," and "Zapateado," all highly characteristic movements and masterly in their instrumentation. Barcelonese audiences have shown themselves of late years no mean judges of musical excellence, and the new work will probably, ere long, also obtain a hearing cutside Spain.

Berlin.—Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" (known here as "Figaro's Hochzeit"), newly mounted somewhat after the pattern of the Munich representations of the work, was produced at the Royal Theatre on the 9th ult., with, on the whole, a satisfactory cast, and conducted with consummate skill by Herr Weingartner.——The first of the Philharmonic Concerts of the season took place, under Herr Nikisch's direction, on the 12th ult., the programme including Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, the "Meistersinger" Prelude, Brahms's C minor Symphony, Beethoven's Violin Concerto (executant, M. Petschnikoff), and two instrumental numbers from Humperdinck's fairy drama "Die Königskinder." The latter, representing as they do the composer of "Hansel and Gretel" at his best, proved immensely effective. The concert season here is now again in full activity, and it has been estimated that at least eight hundred performances of one kind and another will take place between this and March next, so that the critics, at least, will not swell the ranks of the unemployed.

Brünn.—It is proposed by the Czech party here to erect a national theatre in this the capital of Moravia, hitherto possessed only of an excellent German Municipal Theatre. Subscriptions are being raised and a grand Concert, with good financial results, was recently given for that purpose at Prague. Goldmark's "The Cricket on the Hearth" was brought out at the Municipal Theatre on the 3rd ult., and enthusiastically received.

Brussels.—The recent début at the Théâtre de la Monnaie of Mdlle. Kutscherra, as Elsa in "Lohengrin," more than justified the considerable distinction gained by the lady in the leading concert institutions of the French capital; her grand and well-trained voice, dramatic powers, and poetic appreciation of her part at once winning for her the suffrages of the audience.——M. d'Indy has completed the score of an important orchestral work in variation form which will be first produced at one of M. Ysaye's Concerts this season. These re-commence on the 29th inst., with M. Raoul Pugno as the pianist and Beethoven's "Eroica" in the programme.——M. Edgar Tinel has completed his new oratorio "Sainte Godelive," which will shortly be published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig. It will probably be performed this winter at the Concerts Populaires.

Buda-Pesth. — On the 4th ult., at the Royal Theatre, an enormously successful first performance, in the Hungarian language, took place of Goldmark's comic opera "The Cricket on the Hearth," under the direction of M. Alexander Erkel. The composer, who is a Hungarian by birth, was present and had to appear before the curtain no less than fourteen times during the performance.——Dr. Hans Richter will conduct six of the Philharmonic Society's Concerts here during the present season, while the remaining two will be under the direction respectively of Herr Siegfried Wagner and Capellmeister Sucher, of Berlin.

Cologne.—Reznicek's comic opera, "Donna Diana," as yet produced only on two or three German stages, was brought out at the Stadt-Theater, on the 4th ult., and received with high favour. The work has also been accepted for performance at Berlin, Wiesbaden, Graz, and elsewhere.

Copenhagen.—A new opera, entitled "Kean," by Herr August Enna, the successful composer of "Die Hexe," is in course of preparation at the Royal Theatre. The libretto of the new work, by Herr Michaëlis, is founded upon the well-known drama by Dumas.

Dresden.—The birth anniversary of the warrior-poet Körner was signalised, on September 23, by the performance, at the Royal Theatre, of the drama "Zriny," and by the highly interesting first production of Schubert's setting of Körner's "Der Vierjährige Posten," in the stage version given it by Dr. Robert Hirschfeld, of Vienna. The score, written by Schubert from May 13 to 19, 1815, comprises nine numbers, and does not include a Finale. The latter has been ably supplied by Dr. Hirschfeld, from themes contained in the overture and from one or two other little-known "Singspiele" of the master. The performance, under Herr Schuch's direction, was excellent, amongst the numbers most appreciated being a prayer, finely rendered by Frau Edel, a duet, and an exquisite terzetto, sung by the lady mentioned, Herren Anthes and Kebuschka.—Herr August Bungert's music-drama, "The Return of Ulysses," forming part of the trilogy "Homeric World," is to be brought out at the Royal Theatre during the present month.

Genoa.—A curious ceremony was recently performed at the Municipal Palace here, when the urn, a kind of sarcophagus, containing Paganini's violin was opened for the purpose of providing the instrument with a fresh set of strings. In the presence of the fathers of this city, the distinguished violinist, Signor Leandro Campaneri, thereupon once more made the famous fiddle give utterance to the "Campanella" of its former master, and one or two other pieces, after which it was again consigned to the dignified silence of its costly receptacle.

Graz.—Madame Gemma Bellincioni, the distinguished prima donna, has just given a series of representations at the Stadt-Theater to enthusiastic audiences, her impersonations including the titular parts in Mascagni's new operatic duologue, "Zanetto," "Traviata," "Carmen," and Nedda in "Pagliacci."

Hamburg.—It is stated that the brain-mischief which eventually led to the lamented death of Catharina Klafsky was caused by a fall she sustained some months since while in New York, when she struck her head sharply against a table, though little was thought of it at the time. The funeral of the great prima donna took place amidst countless tokens of sympathy from far and near, and, in accordance with her expressed wish, she was laid in her grave clad in the white robes assumed by Elisabeth in the third act of "Tannhäuser."

Leipzig.—The season of the Gewandhaus Concerts commenced on the 15th ult., under the direction of Herr Nikisch, the performances including Schumann's E flat major Symphony, with a special reference to the demise of the composer's widow during the vacation of an institution so closely associated with the memory of both artists. The present series of Concerts will include, in addition to the ordinary repertory, Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, Brahms's "Triumphlied," Bruckner's Te Deum, a new orchestral work by Herr Mahler, and other interesting pieces. Amongst the artists engaged may be mentioned Professor Joachim, Paderewski, Leo Stern, Ellen Gulbranson, and Eugen Gura.——The mortal remains of Johann Sebastian Bach and those of the poet Gellert are about to be transferred to their, it may be hoped, final resting-place in the crypt assigned for the purpose in the renovated church of St. John, which has just been completed. As regards the projected monument to the great Cantor, the subscriptions so far amount to some fifteen thousand marks, about one-half of the sum required.

Magdeburg.—On the 11th ult. the Kirchen-Gesangverein celebrated the completion of its jubilee, having in the course of its fifty years' existence, from very modest beginnings, attained to a foremost position amongst similar institutions of the fatherland. A special feature in the present celebration was supplied by the fact that the Society is still conducted by its founder, Music-director Gustav Rebling, whose receptive and appreciative mind as regards the progress of the art during the half-century of his conductorship has been the chief cause in the development of the Society. It was the Magdeburg Gesangverein which took part in the memorable performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in connection with the laying of the foundation stone of the Bayreuth Theatre.

Munich.—The special operatic performances organised by the directors of the Royal Theatre came to a close on September 30, with a performance of "Don Giovanni," at the Residenz Theater; two excellent representations of "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," under Herr Mottl's direction, marking the close of those of Wagnerian works at the Royal Theatre. At the latter institution the ordinary performances have been resumed, and will include during the season, amongst novelties, Kienzl's "Evangelimann," Goldmark's "Cricket on the Hearth," Schilling's "Ingwelde" (one of the most important post-Wagnerian works), and an initiatory first performance of a (presumably comic) opera, entitled "Zinnober," by Herr Hausegger.——Herr Hermann Levi, the famous Wagnerian conductor, has resigned the first Capellmeistership at the Royal Theatre, which he has held with such distinction for the past twenty-four years. He retires on a pension, retaining, by desire of the Prince Regent, the honorary title of his office. The appointment of Herr Richard Strauss and Dr. Erdmannsdoerfer as his successors leaves the musical direction of the Royal establishment in excellent hands. Herr Levi, who is in his fifty-seventh year, is about to be married to Frau Marie Fiedler, widow of Conrad Fiedler, a distinguished art critic.

Prague.—A new one-act opera, "Die Schneeflocke," by Harry Berté, achieved a brilliant success on its first performance, at the German Theatre, on the 4th ult. It was followed, on the same evening, by a new ballet by Richard Heuberger, entitled "Die Lautenschlägerin" ("The Lute Player"), which likewise met with a good reception, on account chiefly of its melodious score.

St. Petersburg.—The Imperial Opera re-opened its doors on September 1 with a performance of Tschaïkowsky's most popular opera "Eugène Onéguine." At the Marie Theatre, Glinka's "Rousslane et Ludmilla" has been revived with enormous success.

Stuttgart.—A cycle of Mozart's operas, newly mounted, was opened on the 10th ult., at the Royal Opera, with "Le Nozze di Figaro," for which the recent Munich performances served as a model. The performances last month also included the first production here of Smetana's "Dalibor," which proved highly successful. Mascagni's "Zanetto" is to be brought out next.

The Hague.—There will be no less than four operatic companies competing for the favour of the public here this season—viz., the Royal French Opera (a permanent institution), the Netherlandish Opera from Amsterdam, an Italian troupe, and a German Operetta Company; sufficient, one should think, to meet the requirements of a capital of less than two hundred thousand inhabitants. At the French Opera, M. Massenet's "Hérodiade" and M. Saint-Saëns's "Proserpine" will be novelties here, and there is also promised a new opera, "Les Gueux de Mer," by a native composer, M. Van't Kruys, an organist of some note. At the Netherlandish Opera, Madame Sigrid Arnoldson was announced to appear last month in "Traviata," when the lady was to sing either in French or Italian, with the other artists lending her the solid and substantial support of the native idiom. Madame Arnoldson was also announced to sing in opera at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Utrecht last month.

Vienna.—Smetana's "Die verkaufte Braut" ("The Bartered Bride") was produced for the first time at the Imperial Opera on the 4th ult., thirty years after its first performance at Prague. The performance, under the direction of Herr Fuchs, was an excellent one in its every detail, and roused the audience to enthusiasm. The work was brought out here originally in Czech during the Theatrical Exhibition in 1892.

Weimar.—Herr Xaver Scharwenka's opera "Mataswintha" was produced for the first time on any stage at the Court Theatre, on the 4th ult., and achieved a complete success, under the direction of Herr Stavenhagen. The composer, who had come over from New York on purpose to superintend the final rehearsals, was, together with the principal interpreters, recalled again and again. The libretto is founded upon the well-known novel by Felix Dahn, "Ein Kampf um Rom," and proved very effective, while the music, somewhat in the style of that of "Lohengrin," contains many fascinating movements. Fräulein Joachim, the daughter of the eminent violinist, sang the titular part, the other leading female rôle being in the hands of Frau Stavenhagen.

OBITUARY.

An excellent and highly esteemed French artist, M. Jules Garcin, died on the 10th ult., in Paris, at the age of sixty-six. M. Garcin was a native of Bourges, and studied with distinction at the Paris Conservatoire, where he was one of the most brilliant pupils of Alard, obtaining the first prize for violin playing in 1853, as well as prizes for harmony and composition. He soon after entered the orchestra of the Opéra, where he held the position of solo violin and assistant-conductor until the year 1871. He was also for many years, up to 1885, the principal conductor of the Société des Concerts, where he was amongst the first to introduce the Symphonies of Schumann and Brahms, and also produced, for the first time in Paris, such works as Beethoven's Missa Solennis, and the Mass in B minor of Bach, as well as excerpts from Wagner's works. In 1890 M. Garcin succeeded Massart in a leading professorship of violin playing at the Conservatoire.

The death is announced, on the 12th ult., at Paris, of Madame Gaveaux-Sabatier, a concert-singer, who some forty years ago was the delight of Parisian audiences, and who also appeared on one or two occasions in London. For many years past she had devoted herself most successfully to teaching. She was in her seventy-seventh year.

M. Aloys Kettenus, violinist, for many years an esteemed member of the Royal Italian Opera and Hallé orchestras, who died in London on the 3rd ult., was a Belgian by birth, having been born at Verviers in 1823. He studied for some years in Germany, where he appeared with success in concert-rooms, and afterwards settled in this country. An able and successful teacher of his instrument, he was also the composer of a Violin Concerto, a Duet for violin and pianoforte, a Concertino for four violins with orchestra, and other works. An opera of his, entitled "Stella Monti," was produced at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, in 1862, but did not maintain itself on the répertoire of that Institution.

Jean Gaspard Isidore de Swert, a distinguished violoncello player, died recently at Schaerbeck, near Brussels, at the age of sixty-six. He was a professor at the Brussels Conservatoire and at the Académie de Musique in his native town of Louvin, and also for many years solo player in the orchestra of the Théâtre de la Monnaie. He was a brother of the more celebrated violoncellist, Jules de Swert, one of the most brilliant pupils of Servais.

A Norwegian composer of some note, Johan G. Conradi, died at Christiania, on the 2nd ult., aged seventy-six. Amongst his compositions are incidental music to several popular Norwegian dramas and a number of choral pieces and songs. He was also the author of a History of Music and Musicians in Norway.

American papers announce the death, on the 10th ult., at Brattleboro, U.S., of Levi K. Fuller, ex-Governor of the State of Vermont, and head of the well-known American organ manufacturing firm of Messrs. Estey and Co. Mr. Fuller, who was the son-in-law of the late Jacob Estey, the founder of the business, became a partner in 1866, and his mechanical genius enabled him to effect numerous important inprovements in the instruments turned out by the firm. He had made a special study of the question of musical pitch, for which purpose he on several occasions visited Europe, and it was owing to his influence and authority that a uniform pitch—the normal diapason—was adopted some few years since by the American Association of Pianoforte and Organ Makers.

Henry E. Abbey, the well-known impressario, died on the 17th ult., in New York. He had been in a precarious state of health for some months past, and his death did not, therefore, come to his numerous friends as a surprise. The deceased was an entrepreneur on a colossal scale, whose weekly payments are said, at one time, to have exceeded £16,000. He was first heard of in 1880, when, in conjunction with Mr. Jarrett, he conducted Madame Sarah Bernhardt's progress through the United States. In the following year, upon Madame Patti revisiting America, he undertook the arrangements of a Concert Tour of the diva with great success, himself sharing in the profits. In 1882 he started an Italian Opera Company in opposition to that of Messrs. Gye and Mapleson's, and secured the New Metropolitan Opera House in New York, with Madame Nilsson as his leading "Star," that lady receiving a salary of £300 a night. This was considered enormously high pay at the time, but the scale gradually increased, and reached its climax in the payment ultimately to Madame Patti of a thousand guineas nightly, in advance. Amongst other tours managed by the deceased were those of Josef Hofmann, when in his prodigy stage; M. Coquelin, Mdlle. Réjane, and others, and for some years he also directed the tours of Sir Henry Irving and the Lyceum Company in the States He was, moreover, concerned in the seasons of Light Opera, of which Miss Lillian Russell was the "Star." Mr. Abbey was not, of course, invariably fortunate in his artistic enterprises, and some years since he was obliged to suspend operations and call in his creditors, but he eventually paid his liabilities in full, a fact which stood him in good stead during the recent similar crisis of affairs while in partnership with Mr. Grau. The latter, at a meeting held in New York in September, was definitely appointed general manager of the Metropolitan Opera House in that city, a post he formerly held in conjunction with Mr. Abbey.

Alfred Stubbs Baker, organist of St. James's Church, New York, and one of the most promising of American musicians, died of typhoid fever on the 13th ult., at the early age of twenty-eight. He will be succeeded at St. James's by Mr. W. H. Hall, conductor of the Brooklyn Oratorio Society.

We have also to record the following deaths:—

On September 16, at Oberstdorf, Carl Friedrich Schwiedam, pianist, professor at the Berlin Royal Hochschule, aged fifty-five.

On September 18, at St. Petersburg, M. Toushmalow, gifted young composer, pupil of Rimsky-Korsakoff, orchestral conductor of the Warsaw Opera and that of Tiflis.

On September 18, at Tortosa, Juan Baptista Plasencia Aznar, composer of church music, organist of Corpus Christi College at Valencia.

On September 20, at Paris, Auguste Kiesgen, principal organist of the Church of St. Bernard, formerly Maître de Chapelle of Paris Cathedral.

Recently, at Elberfeld, Frederick Plengorth, composer, conductor of choral societies, formerly Capellmeister at the Stadt-Theater, aged sixty-eight.

On September 23, at Naples, Vincenzo Moscuzza, a once popular composer, pupil of Mercadante.

On September 24, at Vienna, Ignaz Leusser, orchestral conductor and composer, aged seventy-four.

On September 28, at Samoden, Professor Samuel Kümmerle, organist and historian of church music, born at Malmsheim, near Stuttgart.

Recently, on board the steamer Scrivia, en route from Constantinople to Catania, Gennaro de Filippo, Italian operatic singer.

On September 29, at Clapham, Arthur Bradwen Andrew, late solo chorister at Westminster Abbey, a boy of exceptional talent, aged sixteen.

On September 30, at Paris, M. Lancien, violinist, for many years leader at the Pasdeloup Concerts, and solo violin at the Opéra.

Recently, at Alexandria, Marianna Raymondi-Bionducci, violoncellist, pupil of her father, Filippo Raymondi, in Rome, aged sixty-nine.

On the 13th ult., at Paris, Louis Joseph Marie Mas, viola player of the Conservatoire Concerts, member of the quartet party of MM. Maurin and Chevillard, who first introduced Beethoven's last quartets to Parisian audiences, aged seventy-five.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Aberdeen.—The Philharmonic Society, on the evening of Saturday, the 17th ult., gave a Concert on popular lines in the Music Hall. The orchestra, under the leadership of Herr Reiter, played the Overtures to "Rob Roy" and "Guy Mannering," and Godfrey's "Reminiscences of Scotland"; and the choir sang several arrangements of Scotch songs. Several members of the Society contributed instrumental selections, the best of which was that by Mr. G. S. Mackay. The Subscription Concerts of this Society will take place on the 4th inst. (when, in conjunction with the Tonic Sol-fa Institute, a performance of "The Messiah" will be given); 17th inst., a Costume Recital of "Cavalleria Rusticana"; and two other Concerts, the dates of which are not yet fixed.——The Aberdeen Choral Union announces four Subscription Concerts, the first of which was to take place on the 27th ult., the second will be given on the 28th inst., the third on January 2 ("The Messiah"), and the last in March (Bennett's "May Queen" and selections from Sullivan's compositions).

Bangor.—The second Organ Recital given in the Parish Church by Mr. Robert Jones, on September 28, proved quite as successful as the previous performance. The programme contained Mendelssohn's Sixth Organ Sonata, Thomé's "Andante Religioso," and Guilmant's Allegro in F sharp minor. Effective variety was contributed by Mr. W. Thomas, who sang several airs by Mendelssohn and Sullivan.

Beckenham.—Miss Madeleine Johnson gave a Violin Recital in the Public Hall on September 24, when she was assisted by Madame Belle Cole, Miss Lucie Goodwin, and Miss Penderel Moody, who recited several pieces with effect, amongst others two with musical accompaniment. The Concert-giver played one of Max Bruch's Violin Concertos (with Miss Boyd Hopkins) and other pieces.

Beeston, Notts.—An Organ Recital took place at the Parish Church on the 4th ult., when the following programme was ably rendered by Mr. Byng Johnson, the organist and choirmaster: Mendelssohn's First Sonata, "Quis est Homo" (Rossini), Andante and Allegro (Bache), Berceuse (Delbrück), Andante Grazioso (Smart), and Grand Chœur (Hollins). Miss Johnson also played a violin solo with skill. The large attendance would seem to indicate that a series of such Recitals would be welcome and lead to a healthy interest in the art.

Blenheim.—Two highly successful Concerts were given in the afternoon and evening of the 14th ult., in the Long Library of the Duke of Marlborough's house. The performances were in aid of St. Mary's Church Restoration Fund, and the professional artists who took part were Miss Thudichum, Miss Marianne Eissler, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Henry Sunman, Mr. C. W. Perkins, and Mr. George Grossmith. Lady Randolph Churchill contributed some pianoforte pieces, and the singing of Mrs. Ronalds and the recitations given by Mrs. Deane Willis were features of the Concerts. Mr. W. Bendall was the accompanist.

Boscombe.—The fifth annual meeting of the members of the Philharmonic Society took place on September 28 and was largely attended. The balance-sheet showed that the Society was in a most satisfactory financial position, and it was resolved that Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" should be put in rehearsal under the conductorship of Dr. Thomas.

Brighton.—The Sacred Harmonic Society began its fiftieth year in a most auspicious manner, on the 15th ult., by a performance of Haydn's "Creation" at the Dome. The soloists were Miss Maud Ballard, Mr. William Davies, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. P. J. Starnes presided at the organ, and the choir and orchestra were ably conducted by Mr. Robert Taylor.

Canterbury.—Messrs. C. M. Gann and J. S. Grundy gave their third Violin and Pianoforte Recital on the 6th ult., at Goulden's Music Room. These performances are mainly given for educational purposes, and, judging by the attention with which the performances were followed, their object would seem to be much appreciated.

Dartmouth.—An Organ Recital was given in St. Saviour's Church, on the 14th ult., by Mr. W. J. Friendship. The programme included works by Handel, Widor, Batiste, Guilmant, Chipp, and Spark. Miss S. T. Brown also contributed three violin solos.

Darwen.—Mr. James Eccles opened his fourteenth series of Concerts on the 6th ult., in the Co-operative Hall. The vocalists were Madame Lilian Tree, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. W. Llewellyn. The violoncello playing by Mr. Sydney Brooks was a prominent feature of the evening.

Denbigh.—Two excellent Organ Recitals were given on the afternoon and evening of the 12th ult., in St. David's Church, by Mr. A. H. Allen, the programmes presenting a comprehensive selection of organ music.

Fowey.—In the fine old Parish Church of St. Fimbarrus—aptly termed by the late Archbishop of Canterbury the noblest church in the diocese of Truro—an Organ Recital was given on the 30th ult., by Mr. C. E. Juleff, organist and choir-director of the church and private organist to Lord Robartes. The programme consisted entirely of compositions by English composers, and comprised selections from the works of Henry Purcell, Sir John Goss, Sir A. Sullivan, Sir W. S. Bennett, S. S. Wesley, Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, F. H. Cowen, W. Spark, Sir John Stainer, Henry Smart, and W. H. Richmond. Miss Florence Ellery and Mr. F. J. Denison were the vocalists. Another Recital of like character will be given this month.

Halifax, Nova Scotia.—The choir at St. Luke's Cathedral gave a successful rendering of Masser's Harvest Cantata, under the direction of Mr. F. Gatward, on the 4th ult., before a crowded congregation, with whom this little composition has become very popular.

Harrogate.—Dr. A. L. Peace gave two effective Organ Recitals, on September 28, on the new instrument recently erected by Messrs. Abbot and Smith in St. Paul's Church.

Hollinwood.—The Harvest Festival Services took place at St. Margaret's Parish Church on the 11th ult. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to a setting by the organist of the church, Mr. John E. Campbell, and the anthem was Tours's "While the earth remaineth." As concluding voluntaries Mr. Campbell played Stainer's "Jubilant March" in the morning and Guilmant's March in F in the evening.

Hyde, Cheshire.—The Orpheus Glee Society, conducted by Mr. T. N. Bedford, gave its opening Concert this season on the 5th ult., in St. George's School. The solo vocalists engaged were Miss M. E. Booth, Madame J. Holden, Mr. C. H. Moody, and Mr. J. A. Roberts. Much appreciated instrumental solos were contributed by Master W. Faunt and Mr. S. Holt, and Mr. J. Johnson gave some humorous selections. Mr. J. E. Howarth was an efficient accompanist.

Newark.—The Philharmonic Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. T. Wright, has resolved to give three Musical Evenings and a Concert, and at the latter to perform Handel's "Samson." The endeavours being made to form an orchestra in connection with the Society seem likely to prove successful, and the financial report for the last year shows a balance on the right side.

Nottingham.—The organ in the large hall of the Mechanics' Institution having been rebuilt by Messrs. Cousans, Sons and Co., of Lincoln, Recitals were given on the 17th ult., by Mr. E. H. Lemare, organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster. Mr. Lemare is an old favourite in Nottingham, and the announcement of his re-appearance, after a lapse of two or three years, attracted large audiences. The programmes were, at the afternoon Recital: Overture, "Rienzi" (Wagner), "Die Frage" and "Die Antwort" (Wolstenholme), Fugue, "St. Ann's" (Bach), Intermezzo and "Ungarische Tänze" (Brahms), Allegretto in B minor and Marche Solennelle (E. H. Lemare), Vorspiel, "Parsifal" (Wagner), Toccata in E minor (Tombelle). At the evening Recital: Overture, "Tannhäuser" (Wagner), Berceuse (Rousseau), Barcarolle in A flat (E. H. Lemare), Intermezzo (Brahms), Fuga alla Giga (J. S. Bach), Andante in D and Grand Chœur (Hollins), Fugue from Sonata (Reubke), "Frühlingslied" (Grieg), Marche Cortège (Gounod). The selections from Brahms are from transcriptions for organ by Mr. Lemare, in preparation for Messrs. Simrock and Co., Berlin. They were particularly admired, and the whole programme drew hearty applause.

Rhyl.—The commendable practice of the employment of orchestral accompaniment at church services was adopted at Evensong, on September 27, at St. John's Church. The Canticles were sung to a setting by the Rev. Allen Lucas, and the anthem was "The radiant morn hath passed away" (Woodward). Mr. H. Haselden was principal violin, and Mr. Alfred Allen, who presided at the organ, played an excellent selection of organ music after the service. Mr. J. D. Asher, organist of St. John's, conducted.

Uddingston.—An attractive Organ Recital was given on the 19th ult., in the Parish Church, by the organist, Mr. W. Padget Gale, whose selection of pieces included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E minor and Meyerbeer's "Schiller March." Vocal solos were contributed by Miss K. Eadie and Mr. J. Masterson.

Windsor.—The Rev. Canon Gee presided at the annual meeting of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society on September 28, and congratulated the hon. conductor, Sir Walter Parratt, on the esteemed position which the Society held amongst music-lovers in the neighbourhood. The principal work selected for the performance in the forthcoming season is Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Woodford-Wells.—The Harvest Festival was celebrated at All Saints' on the 2nd ult., when Garrett's Harvest Cantata was performed by the choir. On the following Sunday morning the anthem was "Thou crownest the year" (Booth), and in the evening was sung Tours's anthem "While the earth." Master Frederick Pedgrift sang the solo "O for the wings of a dove" (Mendelssohn), and after the benediction the choir again rendered Garrett's Harvest Cantata and Mr. Markham Lee gave a short organ recital.

Woolwich.—The Harvest Festival at the Royal Arsenal Church, Woolwich Dockyard, was held on the 1st ult. The music, which consisted of Simper's Evening Service in F, a selection from Mendelssohn's "Athalie," and Maunder's Te Deum in B flat, was rendered by an augmented choir. Mr. A. S. Horsey, organist and choirmaster of All Saints', Kensington Park, accompanied, and Mr. F. R. Stapley, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. William Irvine (Principal Solo Bass), to St. Peter's, Eaton Square.—Mr. A. H. Leaf (Tenor), to Wigan Parish Church.—Mr. R. G. Kings (Solo Bass), to St. Peter's, Piccadilly.—Mr. J. Richard Morgan (Alto), to St. Patrick's Cathedral and Chapel of Trinity College, Dublin.—Mr. Stanley Ince (Tenor), to Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street.

"ELIJAH"—STOURBRIDGE.

"Her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel,' deservedly called forth prolonged applause."

"MESSIAH"—WORCESTER.

"Mrs. Glover-Eaton sang the soprano music with much feeling and has a charming voice. Altogether she was powerful, vigorous, and sweet, particularly in the air 'Rejoice greatly.'"

CONCERT—WORCESTER.

"Weber's beautiful song 'Softly sighs' was then sung by Mrs. Glover-Eaton with a depth of feeling and finish of execution which fairly enraptured the audience. Mrs. Glover-Eaton has a splendid voice and good enunciation."

"SAMSON"—KIDDERMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY.

"Mrs. Glover-Eaton gave the Airs 'Ye men of Gaza,' 'Then free from sorrow,' and 'God of our Fathers' in a very artistic manner. . . but her grandest effort was decidedly 'Let the bright Seraphim.'"—Sun.

Address, Messrs. Elgar Brothers, Worcester; or, Bridge Street, Stourport. Terms on application.

MR. DOUGLAS POWELL

Having returned from his Australian tour, is prepared to accept Engagements for the forthcoming season. For terms, vacant dates, &c., address, 44, Dafforne Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.; or principal Agents.

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN REGISTER.—May 29.

Mr. Douglas Powell's voice is one of the richest and most pleasing that have yet been heard in Adelaide, and is produced in a most admirable manner. He has perfect command over all the technique of his art, and sings with the intelligence and appreciation of a true artist.

MELBOURNE ARGUS.—June 19.

The warmest praise must be accorded to Mr. Douglas Powell for his artistic rendering of the air "Si tra i ceppi," from Handel's "Berenice," which afforded further proof of his undeniable claim to be included in the ranks of the most distinguished vocal artists who have yet visited Australia.

SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.—June 25.

Mr. Douglas Powell sang two stirring Hungarian songs by Korbay. The first, "Had a horse, a finer no man saw," was declaimed with immense spirit, and the singer, who has a resonant baritone voice, which he uses with judgment, then rendered with great fire the rugged and bizarre "Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane." Later, the baritone sang "Infelice" in a dramatic fashion, revealing at the close of the cavatina the deeper notes of a voice which might almost be classed as a basso cantante. The wildest enthusiasm followed the conclusion of the spirited cabaletta, and after three recalls the baritone responded to hearty cheers by adding the quaint Cavalier ditty "Twankydillo."

SYDNEY DAILY TELEGRAPH.—July 20.
"MESSIAH."

Mr. Powell's singing was in every respect worthy of being classed with the best we have heard. The magnificent declamation of "Why do the nations" is not likely to be forgotten.

ADELAIDE ADVERTISER.—July 30.
"ELIJAH."

It is not too much to say, with his rich musical voice and fine declamatory powers, that Mr. Douglas Powell ranks next to Santley himself amongst those singers who have assumed the part of Elijah in Australia. He has evidently made a special study of oratorio and has the physical and vocal power to heighten the declamatory passages in a manner that brings at once before the mind of the listener the figure of the inspired Prophet.

TEACHERS WANTED.

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

MR. MACDONALD SMITH'S Correspondence Branch having so increased as to oblige him to decline many applications for personal lessons in Touch and Technique, it having also come to his knowledge that his system is being very inadequately re-taught in some quarters and in a way little calculated to bring credit to the method, he has decided to afford to a few competent gentlemen the opportunity of becoming certificated teachers, under the following conditions:—

Applicants to be good musicians, and to prove, by testimonials, previous proficiency in either (a) pure and applied Mechanics or (b) Anatomy and Physiology.

Should many desire to enter for this, certificates will be awarded by competition.

Candidates whose testimonials are satisfactory will, upon payment of an examination fee of £2 2s., be supplied with the set of the general "From Brain to Keyboard" Exercises, and with a list of twenty questions on the physiology of pianoforte playing, to be answered before February 1, 1897. Names of best works to consult will be given.

If by the latter date no candidate has answered these satisfactorily, no certificate will be granted.

Fee for Certificate, £30. Successful candidates will be fully instructed by Mr. Macdonald Smith in every detail of the application of the system to special cases, without further charge.

Young engineers or medical men who are musicians would find the above a remunerative opening.

MACDONALD SMITH,

STEINWAY HALL, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET, W.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

FOURTH AND FIFTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Ninth and Tenth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twentieth to Twenty-fifth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

†ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

ADVENT CANTATA.

BLESSED ARE THEY WHO WATCH

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

The Words selected from Holy Scripture

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

THE TIMES.

This last work, which, since it is quite new, may be dealt with first, came almost as an agreeable surprise to those who have an acquaintance with what passes nowadays for "Church music"—that is, music largely composed of inane sentimentality and triteness. Nowhere in Mr. Blair's work is there any trace of the former vice, and only in the supplementary final chorus, intended to be sung when the work is performed in the concert-room, is there anything approaching to the commonplace. . . . Mr. Blair may deservedly be congratulated upon a composition of undeniable merit, which no doubt will frequently be heard in "quires and places where they sing."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This work, constructed on the old German model, is laid out for soprano solo and chorus, with hymns to be sung by the congregation. . . . The cantata will increase the respect in which Mr. Blair is held as a musician, and, let us hope, encourage the composer to aim yet higher on another occasion.

STANDARD.

The music is purely devotional in feeling—that is to say, in the chaste style of English Church composers. . . . Hymns are included, to be sung by the choir and congregation when the cantata is given in a church, but it is intimated that they may be excised in a concert-room performance. Mr. Hugh Blair has made an agreeable addition to service music in this unpretentious but musicianly work.

DAILY NEWS.

The music is for the most part in the English Church style, but the two solos—one a devotional air, "Sorrow not for those that sleep," and the other, a shorter solo with chorus—indicate that Mr. Blair has an abundant gift of melody; while his choral writing, though by no means abstruse or difficult for ordinary choirs, is undeniably effective. The appendix, intended for concert use, is partly fugal, and it is, perhaps, the best section of a wholly creditable piece of musical workmanship.

MORNING POST.

It is an eminently sound and musicianly work, expressive to no small degree within the limits the composer has sternly imposed on himself, and likely to be often used in the Church, for which it is destined. . . . Mr. Blair should prove a valuable recruit to Church music. He writes with sympathy for the voice both in solos and in choruses, and his scholarship is not obtrusive.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

No amateur association need be afraid that Mr. Blair has studded his composition with difficulties, because he happens to be a cathedral organist, and is versed in the production of older writers for the Church. . . . Mr. Blair's Advent cantata, by reason of its directness, conciseness, and generally-pleasing qualities, bids fair to be widely adopted by church choirs needing serviceable additions to their répertoire.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

This brief and unpretending work, designed specially for the season of Advent, comprises only six numbers, and occupies barely half-an-hour in performance. It serves, however, to exhibit the taste and scholarship of the composer in an extremely favourable light. The scoring is neat and effective, and the vocal writing, especially in the choral portions, uniformly graceful in character. There is, moreover, an element of sentiment about this little work which lifts it above the level of an academic exercise. Mr. Blair is not afraid to be simple, and yet he never deviates into downright platitudes.

ATHENÆUM.

A devotional and expressive little work, written for soprano solo and chorus, unpretentious, but by no means ineffective.

(LUX CHRISTI)

A SHORT ORATORIO

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

REV. E. CAPEL-CURE

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

THE TIMES.

The oratorio, which is divided into sixteen numbers, including solos for all the principal voices and an orchestral prelude entitled "Meditation," occupies only the half of an ordinary evening's programme, and therefore has one attribute which makes for popularity. But it has many other besides. It is undeniably the work of a composer not only well cultivated and trained in his art, but also gifted in no small degree. . . . On a first hearing the most impressive pieces seemed to be the first chorus, "Seek Him," and that entitled "Light out of darkness." In both of them the handling of the orchestra is masterly, and in the former, and again in the short fugal number, "The wisdom of their wise men," the composer is seen at his best as a writer for chorus.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It seems to me absolutely a fact that Mr. Elgar is a composer with whom we shall all have to reckon. He is still a young man. His residence far from London keeps him outside the most vigorous musical life of the country, yet the work under notice bears the unmistakable stamp of distinction, and affords proof of exceptional resources. . . . Mr. Elgar's power in dealing with the orchestra is, for one thing, of extreme value, and we know that he can conjure up melodies from their lurking-places. . . . Much might be said in praise of details, but the "Light of Life" will be heard again, and afford another opportunity of discussing it. Enough now that the oratorio, while more valuable as a promise than as an achievement, is as an achievement that which makes promise well nigh as good as assurance.

STANDARD.

Mr. Elgar has not adopted any special style of composition, and he seems to be able to write fluently and freshly in any way he chooses. The vocal part-writing should be agreeable to the singers, and the orchestration is masterly without being too ambitious. In short, "The Light of Life" is a work of great merit.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His instrumentation is ingenious and picturesque, without being unduly intricate; his solos are extremely grateful to the interpreters, and his choral writing is fresh and spirited. These are great recommendations for a work of this description.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The young Malvern teacher has uncommon talent. . . . his sense of proportion and tone colour, and his knowledge of effect are quite exceptional, and albeit his themes are not always original, they impress in almost every case by their appropriateness of character and expressive force. . . . The best number in the work is the chorus "Light out of darkness," and this is of such excellence that I cannot help looking to Mr. Elgar for a really fine work when he comes across a "book" which appeals in every sense to his strong artistic temperament.

THE QUEEN.

His work excited considerable interest. Taken as a whole, we may, without flattery, say that the high anticipations formed were fully realised. . . . Mr. Elgar has set the libretto to music melodious in the extreme, and in which skilful orchestration is by far the most prominent feature.

PRESS NOTICES.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE FESTIVAL.

"Miss Marie Hooton, who is gifted with a beautiful voice, called forth genuine enthusiasm by her rendering of Barnby's 'O ye that love the Lord.'"—Daily Telegraph, Friday, October 30, 1896.

"The duet, 'I waited for the Lord,' was a good performance, and Miss Marie Hooton, with her pure tone and unforced production, greatly contributed to its success. . . . The honours of the evening were carried off by Miss Hooton, whose chaste style was conspicuous in the air, 'O ye that love the Lord.'"—Birmingham Daily Post, Friday, October 30, 1896.

"The second part of the programme was Barnby's cantata 'The Lord is King.' Here Miss Hooton carried off the honours."—Birmingham Daily Gazette, Friday, October 30, 1896.

"One of the triumphs of the evening was the lovely duet 'I waited for the Lord.' Miss Hooton, although not an infrequent visitor to this district, never before gave anything like the satisfaction she did last evening, sang the part written for a second soprano, and she distinctly adds to her reputation as the result of her conscientious and capable vocalism. Miss Hooton scored another success for her calm and dignified rendering of the contralto solo, 'O ye that love the Lord,' the fair singer's sweet voice being heard to excellent advantage in this number."—Staffordshire Sentinel, Friday, October 30, 1896.

MDLLE. TREBELLI'S AUSTRALIAN TOUR.

"Miss Marie Hooton, who created such a favourable impression at the recent benefit Concert in the Exhibition Building, was accorded a very warm reception on ascending the platform to sing her first number, 'Afton Water.' Her rich and pleasing contralto voice was heard to great advantage in this familiar old song, and she was rewarded with a demonstrative encore, for which she presented a humorous ditty, 'One morn the maid.' Miss Hooton was also encored for her expressive rendering of 'Rory Darlin', and in response sang another pleasing ballad."—South Australian Register, August 26, 1896.

"Miss Marie Hooton, the contralto of the company, increased the good opinion formed of her capabilities at a recent Concert in Adelaide. Her voice, rich in quality and sympathetic in tone, was heard with great pleasure in 'Afton Water,' an old English ditty being given in response to a hearty recall. A similar compliment followed Miss Hooton's second song."—Adelaide Advertiser, August 26, 1896.

"Miss Marie Hooton, the English contralto, more than confirmed the favourable impression she created at her first appearance. Barnby's song, 'When the tide comes in,' served to display her rich voice and artistic expression to great advantage, and later her rendering of Adam's 'The Valley by the Sea' was so much appreciated that she was compelled to sing an encore, as was the case after her first song."—South Australian Register, Friday, August 28, 1896.

"Miss Marie Hooton was heard pleasurably in Gounod's 'When all was young,' and for a pronounced encore she complied with a 'Russian Love Song.' Later the contralto sang 'Killarney,' and for another recall she gave a beautiful rendering of 'Robin Adair.'"—South Australian Register, Monday, August 31, 1896.

In each instance he displayed to the full the wide compass and volume of the rich voice he possesses. His phrasing was capital."—North Manchester Chronicle, Nov. 14, 1896.

"Mr. Roland Hoyle sang most artistically the prologue to 'Pagliacci.'"—Manchester Courier.

"Another attraction is the singing of Mr. Roland Hoyle, a baritone of high order."—Lancashire Evening Express.

(BASS-BARITONE).

Oratorio, Opera, Opera Recitals, and Ballad Concerts.

BATH CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—"At the last moment the eminent baritone could not fulfil his engagement to appear, and a substitute had to be found for the part of Elijah. Fortunately Mr. Llewellyn was able on the very short notice (he was only telegraphed to late on Monday afternoon) to undertake the all-important duty, and right well he discharged it. Whether the performance suffered anything through Mr. ——'s absence we are not in a position to say, not having had the pleasure of hearing him, but it would have been difficult to have improved on the singing of Mr. Llewellyn. In a part which makes heavy demands on the most experienced vocalist he acquitted himself with unqualified excellence. The varying moods of the Prophet were all exemplified with masterly expression. In the exultant air, 'Is not His word like a fire?' Mr. Llewellyn proved himself not only a singer of resource and feeling, but a musician of rare talent. All through his arduous task he acquitted himself with conspicuous ability. Task perhaps is the wrong term to use, for evidently Mr. Llewellyn did not regard it as such, taking each solo with the greatest ease, and even joining in the choruses."—Bath Daily Chronicle, November 3, 1896.

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM

As acquired and in daily use by Professionals and Amateurs in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia.

EXTRACT FROM MISS ROSALIND ELLICOTT'S ORDINARY REPORTS:—

"The Palace, Gloucester.

"Dear Mr. Macdonald Smith,

". . . I can now play the whole of the 'Kreutzer' Sonata up to time, whereas before I began working on your System I used to find the first movement too difficult to attempt. . . . I can now learn new music very quickly, and my reading is greatly improved.

"Sincerely yours,

"ROSALIND F. ELLICOTT."

"Strong words are needed to express strong feelings, and the sight, from day to day, of many a hard-worked student who grinds at technical studies until his brain is dulled for the appreciation of real music, whose hand and arm-muscles are troubled with fatigue, cramp, and, in extreme cases, paralysis, is sufficient to make anyone feel warmly and speak warmly on this subject who has also had an opportunity of seeing and experiencing the enfranchisement from all these ills secured by Mr. Macdonald Smith's system."—J. E. B., in Musical News.

"It is clear that Mr. Macdonald Smith has studied the subject carefully, and acts upon well-ascertained scientific grounds."—Daily Telegraph.

"The great, the supreme merit of Mr. Smith's system consists in the fact that it involves the total abolition and disestablishment of all that terrible scale practising and five-finger exercising."—Westminster Gazette, November 20, 1895.

HINTS ON CHOIR TRAINING FOR COMPETITIONS

"THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW."

"No choir-trainer need be ashamed to learn from that experienced musician, Mr. W. G. McNaught, whose 'Hints on Choir Training for Competitions' have just been issued as a little pamphlet, price 2d., by Messrs. Novello. Mr. McNaught's remarks are addressed more especially to conductors and choirs who are about to take part in the competitions at Kendal, Carlisle, and Morecambe this month, but they will be found equally serviceable by others; and it is astonishing to note how Mr. McNaught has succeeded in compressing into so small a space hints on almost every point of importance to choral conductors. The clear arrangement of paragraphs under the various headings, 'Tone—blend—attack—intonation—rhythm—pace—phrasing,' &c., adds to the value of the book."—Musical News, April 18, 1896.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
DECEMBER 1, 1896.

JOHN DOWLAND.

The gradual publication of Calendars of the State Papers preserved at the Record Office and in the Venetian, Roman, and Spanish Archives, besides the invaluable series of calendars of private collections of MSS. issued under the auspices of the Government, is daily bringing to light many small data and facts of interest in the biographies of our national musicians. To keep pace with these would require the articles in such works as Grove's Dictionary and the great "Dictionary of National Biography" to be continually re-written; and when all the masses of material which still lie hidden are available for the purposes of research, it may safely be predicted that a Dictionary of English Musicians will be a much fuller and more interesting work than would be deemed possible to anyone who is only acquainted with the bald facts to be gleaned from Burney and Hawkins, the two works which have hitherto been the chief sources of information for English readers. To a student of this particular branch of musical history there is always a temptation to delay publishing works of this description until every possible source from which new facts can be gathered shall have been examined; but occasionally it is desirable to recognise that for the present all possible material is not exhausted, and to put together in a convenient form the results which have been already arrived at. In the case of the Elizabethan composers this is especially the case. Some years ago new facts which had come to light with regard to William Byrd necessitated the insertion in the Appendix to Grove's Dictionary of an account of the composer largely at variance with that which was contained in the first volume of the work; and since the most recent account of his great contemporary, John Dowland, appeared in the "Dictionary of National Biography," new particulars with regard to his career have appeared which render a summary of them advisable by way of supplement. With regard to the main particulars of his life there is not much that is new to be said. He was probably born in 1563, according to Fuller, in Westminster, though a dedication of a song, "To my loving countryman, Mr. John Forster the younger, Merchant of Dublin, in Ireland," seems to point to his being an Irishman. It was known that at an early age he went abroad, but before the publication, last year, in Vol. V. of the Calendar of the Marquis of Salisbury's Papers, preserved at Hatfield, of a very remarkable autograph letter from him to Sir Robert Cecil (son of the Great Keeper), the details and reasons of his prolonged European wanderings were not known. The document is so interesting in itself that no apology is needed for reprinting it in full. It is dated from Nürnberg, November 10, 1595, and runs as follows:—

Right honourable, as I have been most bound unto your honour, so I most humbly desire your honour to pardon my boldness and make my choice of your honour to let you understand my bounden duty and desire of God's preservation of my most dear Sovereign Queen and country, whom I beseech God ever to bless and to confound all their enemies what and whomsoever. Fifteen years since I was in France, servant to Sir Henry Cobham, who was ambassador for the Queen's Majesty, and lay in Paris, where I fell acquainted with one Smith, a priest, and one Morgan, sometimes of Her Majesty's chapel, one Verstigan who brake out of England, being apprehended, and one Moris, a Welshman, that was our porter, who is at Rome. These men thrust many idle toys into my head of religion, saying that the Papists' was the truth and ours in England all false; and, I, being but young, their fair words over reached me and I believed with them. Within 2 years after I came into England, where I saw men of that faction condemned and executed, which I thought was great injustice, taking religion for the only cause, and when my best friends would persuade me I would not believe them. Then in time passing one Mr. Johnson died, and I became an humble suitor for his place (thinking myself most worthiest) wherein I found many good and honourable friends that spake for me, but I saw that I was like to go without it, and that any might have preferment but I. Whereby I began to sound the cause and guessed that my religion was my hindrance; whereupon my mind being troubled, I desired to get beyond the seas, which I durst not attempt without licence from some of the Privy Council, for fear of being taken, and so have extreme punishment. And according as I desired there came a letter to me out of Germany from the Duke of Brunswick. Whereupon I spake to your honour and to my lord of Essex, who willingly gave me both your hands (for which I would be glad if there were any service in me that your honours could command). When I came to the Duke of Brunswick he used me kindly and gave me a rich chain of gold, £23 in money, with velvet and satin and gold lace to make me apparell, with promise that if I would serve him he would give me as much as any prince in the world. From thence I went to the Lantgrave of Hessen, who gave me the greatest welcome that might be for one of my quality, who sent a ring into England to my wife, valued at £20 sterling, and gave me a great standing cup with a cover gilt, full of dollars, with many great offers for my service. From thence I had great desire to see Italy and came to Venice and from thence to Florence, where I played before the Duke and got great favours; and one evening I was walking upon the piazzo in Florence, a gentleman told me that he espied an English priest, and that his name was Skidmore, and son and heir to Sir John Skidmore of the Court. So, I being intended to go to Rome to study with a famous musician named Luca Marenzio, stepped to this Mr. Skidmore, the priest, and asked him if he were an Englishman, and he told me yea, and whose son he was. And I telling him my name, he was very glad to see me. So I told him I would go to Rome and desired his help for my safety; for, said I, if they should mistake me there my fortune were hard, for I have been thrust off of all good fortunes, because I am a Catholic, at home; for I heard that her Majesty, being spoke to for me, said I was a man to serve any prince in the world, but I was an obstinate papist. Whereunto he answered, "Mr. Dowlande, if it be not so, make her words true." So, in further talk, we spake of priests, and I told him that I did not think it true that any priests (as we said in England) would kill the Queen, or one go about to touch her finger, and, said I, "Whatsoever my religion be, I will neither meddle nor make with anything there done, so that they do not anything against the Queen." Whereunto he answered that I spake as a good subject to her Majesty. But, said he, in Rome you shall hear Englishmen, your own countrymen, speak most hardly of her and wholly seek to overthrow her and all England; and those be the Jesuits, said he, who are of the Spanish faction. Moreover, said he, we have many jars with them; and withal wished to God the Queen were a Catholic. And, said he, to defend my country against the Spaniards I would come into England and bear a pike on my shoulders. Among our talk, he told me that he had order to attach divers English gentlemen, and that he had been three years England [sic]. So I brought him to his lodging door, where he told me that there was 9 priests come from Rome to go for England. He came but the day before to Florence; and, I think, they came all together. He told me that he would stay there in the town and study in an abbey called Sancta Maria Novella, and that he must keep in for a month, and that he would write letters of me to Rome, which I should receive very shortly. But I heard not of him in a month after. And then there came two friars to my lodgings, the one was an Englishman named Balye, a Yorkshireman. The next day after my speech with Skidmore, I dined with my lord Gray and divers other gentlemen, whom I told of my speech with Skidmore, giving them warning. Whereupon my lord Gray went to Siena and the rest dispersed themselves. Moreover, I told my lord Gray, howsoever I was for religion, if I did perceive anything in Rome that either touched Her Majesty or the State of England, I would give notice of it though it were the loss of my life. Which he liked well, and bade me keep that secret. This Friar Baylie, before named, delivered me a letter which I have here sent unto your honour, which letter I break open before Mr. Josias Bodly, and showed what was written in it to him, and divers other. After this, this Friar Bayly told me he had received letters from Rome to hasten me forward, and told me that my discontentment was known at Rome, and that I should have a large pension of the Pope, and that his Holiness and all the Cardinals would make wonderful much of me. Thereupon I told him of my wife and children, how to get them to me. Whereunto he told me that I should have acquaintance with such as should bring them over, if she had any willingness, or else they would lose their lives; for there came those into England for such purposes; for, quoth he, Mr. Skidmore brought out of England, at his last being there, xvij persons, both men and women, for which the Bishop weeps, when he sees him, for joy. After my departure I called to mind our conference, and got me by myself and wept heartily to see my fortune so hard that I should become servant to the greatest enemy of my prince, country, wife, children and friends, for want. And to make me like themselves, God knoweth I never loved treason nor treachery, nor never knew of any, nor never heard any mass in England, which I find is great abuse of the people, for, on my soul, I understand it not. Wherefore I have reformed myself to live according to her Majesty's laws, as I was born under her Highness, and that, most humbly, I do crave pardon, protesting if there were any ability in me I would be most ready to make amends. At Bolona I met with ij men, the one named Pierce, an Irishman, the other named Dracot. They are gone, both, to Rome. In Venice I heard an Italian say that he marvelled that King Philip had never a good friend in England, that with his dagger would despatch the Queen's Majesty; "but," says he, "God suffers her in the end to give her the greater overthrow." Right honourable, this have I written that her Majesty may know the villany of these most wicked priests and Jesuits and to beware of them. I thank God I have both forsaken them and their religion, which tendeth to nothing but destruction. Thus I beseech God, night and day, to bless and defend the Queen's Majesty, and to confound all her enemies, and to preserve your honour and all the rest of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council. I think that Skidmore and the other priests are all in England; for he staid not at Florence, as he said he would to me, and Friar Baylie told me that he was gone into France to study the law. At Venice and all along as I come into Germany say [sic] that the King of Spain is making great preparation to come for England this next summer, where, if it pleased your honour to advise me, by my poor wife, I would most willingly lose my life against them. Most humbly beseeching your honour to pardon my ill writing, and worse inditing, and to think that I desire to serve my country and hope to hear of your good opinion of me.

This letter is endorsed with a copy of a letter from the priest, John Scudamore (Dowland's "Mr. Skidmore"), addressed to Nicolas Fitzherbert, at Rome, in which the writer begs his correspondent to show what favour he can to their countryman, Mr. Dowland, whose "exquisiteness upon the lute" and "cunning in musick" will have come to his ears long ago, adding, "he is no meddler but rather inclined to the good, and only for the fame of Lucca Emorentiana [i.e., Luca Marenzio!] and love of music hath undertaken this voyage."

Dowland's letter is so graphic that the matter of it needs but little comment, though it may not be out of place to give a few details as to some of the persons mentioned in it. This may be conveniently reserved for our next issue. W. B. S.

FROM MY STUDY.

According to promise, The Musical Times now presents to its readers an interesting group of autographs in fac-simile. The signatures were obtained in the artists' room of the Birmingham Town Hall after the first part of "The Redemption" had been performed. It will be remembered that Gounod conducted his own work, and no one who knew him will be surprised to hear that he left the platform in a state of physical distress, much exhausted by the strain upon his attention and the emotional effects which, at such a time, none could have felt more than he. This accounts, no doubt, for the tremulous signature at the top of the page. At my prompting the master added to his name a statement that he considered "The Redemption" to be the work of his life. The photographed page bears witness to changes made by time. Two of the signatories—Charles Gounod and Janet Patey—have gone from amongst us since 1882, while another—Frederic King—has retired from the concert-room to do useful work as a teacher of the vocal art. Happily, the major part remain where they were, and have since added many notable achievements to a record which, however, contains nothing more distinguished than participation in the first performance of the French musician's impressive Trilogy.

I have been much interested in reading an article, by Jean Misme, entitled "La Gymnastique à la Scène." It appears in the French monthly, La Vie Théâtrale, and calls attention to a curious development of the modern passion for movement. Beginning with a reference to café-concerts and the amusement they provide, the writer states that there "song alternates with display of more or less natural phenomena and gymnastic exercises." He adds: "It is to be remarked, however, that these (the gymnastic exercises) more and more preponderate." The spectacle-concert is fast becoming merely a circus. "Already, in several places, the chanson has completely disappeared. Certain establishments of the kind, and those the most distinguished, have broken the last link connecting them with the old café-chantant, and adopted the American music hall as their model. In a little while the chanson will be reduced to the status of a mere recollection, or a curiosity." The natural phenomenon, according to this writer, is going out also. Women with two heads are at a discount, and managers prefer to engage "artistes" who can show the public the beauty of force and agility. All "artistes" are acrobats now. The dancers present a vertigineous chaos of arms and legs, while the musicians play variations on the Russian National Anthem hanging by the heels from a trapeze. As for children, they are no longer prodigies of the pianoforte or arithmetic, but of gymnastics. In all this the French writer beholds a sign of a universal condition. The craze for physical exercises, he contends, has nothing to do with beauty of form, but rather with the charm of movement. "It is the sight of movement which gratifies the public—movement the most violent and dangerous possible. And the success of the café-concerts which minister to this taste is such that it affects the managers of theatres. . . . Do we not go to see—O sign of the times!—clowneries even at our Academie Nationale de Musique? And this is emphatically a sign of the times. For, if the theatre reflects real life, it is quite natural that its performances should resemble more and more the competitions of gymnastic societies." The present ideal of society is the greatest possible exercise of force and agility. "Love of accelerated movement is a tendency of our age, and the most pronounced of all. This new idea of pleasure comes to us from America, where it is logically in its place as a survival of savage life amid a recent civilisation. With us it is a mania of imitation—'snobisme.'"

The writer finds some comfort in the thought that every fashion which is largely adopted, and endures, answers to a want. He desires to see in the rage for violent exercise a necessary reaction against the physical degeneracy of a neurotic era. If it be so, good; but everything in due proportion. There is no due proportion when physical pleasure takes the place of intellectual enjoyment on its own ground. "Let us abandon café-concerts to acrobats without regret, but let us keep the theatre sacred to dramatic and musical art."

I have given the gist of the article in La Vie Théâtrale, because it indicates a manifest danger of degeneration through exaggerating that which, within due limits, is of value. Already mischief has been done by a craze that finds the highest good in "accelerated movement" and physical sensations, the analogues of which have now come to be looked for in art, and are found, I regret to say, in much modern music.

Here is a clipping from W. A. Ambros' book, "The Boundaries of Music and Poetry." He is referring to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and says: "Now it is greatly to be doubted that a representer of Puck was at his (Shakespeare's) disposal to fly, at his departure, 'swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow'—it is greatly to be doubted that his representers of the fairies were able to 'creep into acorn cups and hide them there.' The music convinces us of all these things, in spite of our eyes. When we are listening to the wonderfully elusive, flattering, skipping, bantering G minor Scherzo (that miracle of instrumentation), introducing Puck's roguish pranks, we believe everything that the poet relates of him; before our eyes Puck skips into the side scenes; to our ears he actually flies, like the arrow from the Tartar's bow, and we believe the ear more than the eye." This is quite true, but must be taken as truth only on an assumption that the explaining word goes with sound. The Scherzo in G, vivid as it is, if played to twenty listeners knowing nothing of the composer's application of his work, would probably be interpreted in twenty ways. It is a fundamental weakness of music that, pictorially, it cannot stand alone. Such was the art of the schoolboy who wrote under his drawing of a horned creature, "This is a cow."

May, 1896, is a long time ago, but never mind. I have just read, in the New York Looker-On for that month, a trenchant and plain-spoken article, "The German Opera Season." It is necessary to explain what the terms "trenchant" and "plain-spoken" mean in this connection, because they are likely to be connected in English minds with the outbursts of envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness which characterise what is called in this country "new criticism." The author, Mr. W. J. Henderson, simply speaks right out. He goes for his mark without beating about the bush, gives reasons for his conclusions, and lays down his pen without fear of actions for libel. All this because he has that supreme critical requisite—a judicial mind. I like to see a man balancing pros and cons, not running amok at first sight. Here is a sample of the Hendersonian method:

"Your genuine Wagner devotee treats the Italian opera with pity and contempt as a thing too slight to merit serious condemnation; but a true Donizettian always swears when he hears Wagner. . . . There is good in Donizetti, despite all learned treatises De Contemnenda Lucia, and, as for Wagner, he will have his little tune now and then, even if he has to steal it from Schubert. Personally, I thrive well under both treatments, but I am an eclectic and prefer to take my Wagner in homœopathic doses—a little every month—and my Donizetti in allopathic—the whole of 'Lucia' once every four years." With this introduction of Mr. Henderson as a reasonable eclectic, I proceed to pick out some plums from his article.

"A good many estimable persons, who are fond of music, mince pie, and other rich foods, are under the delusion that the essence of German opera is the language in which the libretti are written." This may help to explain why some English choral societies perform German works in a language which not one in a hundred auditors understands, and not one in twenty of the singers can properly pronounce.

Here are two neat definitions: "To sing and to sing beautifully and for one's own glory, at no matter what sacrifice of the composer's dramatic purpose, is the aim of the Italian." "The purpose of the German operatic artist is to give the fullest and most convincing expression of the dramatic context of the work in hand." Neither is perfect. "Good singing is an essential part of the performance of opera and there is no substitute for it. Neither is there any substitute for the true dramatic treatment of the lyric drama, as practised by the Germans." Again: "You will probably say that opera is, at best, only a hybrid art-form, and ought not to be taken so much in earnest. I am not disposed to quarrel with you, dear friend, as to the impurity of the breed, being myself a believer that the loftiest music is that which is absolute." Unquestionably it is, but seldom in these days does a man of light and leading venture to say so. A good estimate of Alvary follows: "He breaks every known rule of vocal art every time he opens his mouth, and, owing to his vicious style of vocalising the vowel sounds, he has constructed a dialect of German wholly his own. He is certainly welcome to it; no one will wish to steal it from him. And yet in 'Siegfried' the man is simply fascinating. His acting is so free, so buoyant, so full of the large fresh breath of youth's spring-tide, and so eloquent that it chains the mind and wins the heart." The foregoing are mere sips at the Hendersonian cup, but they are appetising. There is a breezy freshness about them that feels healthy, and it is found in conjunction with an obvious determination to be impartial. Mr. Henderson could not so have written in a New York "daily." "Critics," he says, "do not own the papers; they are only employees." Being that only, it seems that they have to take orders from their masters.

If there be a composer of madrigals among my readers, here are some words for him, taken from Thomas Stanley's translation of the "Anacreontea":

As lately I a garland bound,
'Mongst roses I there Cupid found;
I took him, put him in my cup,
And drunk with wine, I drank him up.
Hence then it is that my poor breast
Could never since find any rest.

For a composition to be sung by jovial souls what can be better than this?—

When my sense in wine I steep,
All my cares are lull'd asleep;
Rich in thought, I then despise
Crœsus, and his royalties;
Whilst with ivy twines I wreath me
And sing all the world beneath me.
Others run to martial fights,
I to Bacchus his delights;
Fill the cup then, boy, for I
Drunk than dead had rather lie.

Thomas Stanley "flourished" in the seventeenth century, during the Puritan era.

BACH'S MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

The name of Sebastian Bach first appeared in the programmes of the Philharmonic Society at the Concert of June 24, 1844, when his Overture and Suite in D was first performed in England. The historian of the Society, Mr. George Hogarth, does not record the fact. The introduction of this Bach piece was doubtless due to Mendelssohn, who conducted this and four other Philharmonic Concerts during the season of 1844. The leading critic of the day, Mr. J. W. Davison, welcomed the novelty in the following words:

The overture and suite of Bach must be regarded rather as a curiosity than as a specimen of musical beauty. The first and longest part is an elaborate and fugued movement in the style of some of the overtures of Handel, but more obscure and less effective. The Air which succeeds is exquisitely lovely. The Bourrée (so-called), a kind of minuet and trio, is vigorous and quaint. The Gigue, which concludes the suite, is very bag-wiggish, but not proportionately interesting. The audience were evidently pleased with this composition, to judge from their repeated plaudits. To us, from the sameness of style, and the monotony of key—every movement being in D—it was on the whole (apart from historical interest) somewhat tedious.

I have already mentioned that Bach's small E minor Organ Fugue was first printed and published in England. The same honour can also be claimed for most of his Chorale-preludes for the organ, which first appeared in print in an English publication. Messrs. Coventry and Hollier, who had already published Bach's great Organ Fugues as "Studies," arranged with Mendelssohn that he should edit the Chorale-preludes from Bach's original MSS. in his possession, for which they remunerated him at the rate of ten shillings each number. The work was published in 1845 with the following title:

John Sebastian Bach's | Organ | Compositions on Corales (Psalm Tunes), | Edited from the original manuscripts | by | Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. | London: published by Coventry & Hollier, 71, Dean Street, Soho. | Breithopf (sic) and Hârtel, Leipzig.

The Preface, written in English and signed in fac-simile by Mendelssohn, is not, I think, generally known, and may therefore be quoted:

The following continuation of John Sebastian Bach's Studies for the organ . . . contains all those organ compositions of his on Corales (or Psalm Tunes) which I have been able to collect, and which not only bear his name, but most evidently the marks of his genius.

Of the 44 short Preludes, I am fortunate enough to possess his manuscript, with the exception of but a few pages; the pieces are numbered in his own handwriting (even twice in a different way), and there can be no doubt that he intended them to form a Collection of their own; they differ entirely, in length, as well as in style, from the 16 Grand Preludes. Of these last I have not seen Bach's manuscript, and do not even know whether it still exists and where; but I possess an old copy, written either during his lifetime or at least very shortly after. As he used to copy his own manuscripts several times, and made different alterations in every copy, but still more so as other copyists used to misunderstand his meaning, and thus transmitted many wrong passages, bars, and chords in these complicated works, it is almost always a difficult task to get at Bach's original reading in its correctness.

Accordingly, I directed my attention principally to this point, and tried to make this Edition deviate as little from Bach's original writing as I possibly could. I even thought it interesting to the Public, to see by his original inscriptions how he gave, now and then, a direction as to stops, movement, or style of playing, but much more frequently left all these particulars to the taste and fancy of the performer.

It may also be interesting to compare the Corale-Melodies of this Collection with those of the Choral-Buch (Collection of Corales), of which there exist several correct editions.

Frankfort, 17 February, 1845.

Mendelssohn's remarks on organ registration, as prefixed to the "Fifteen grand Preludes" (in continuation of the above), may be of interest to organists:

With regard to the selection of stops, it might not be superfluous to remark in general that for the present compositions, the superscription "Full Organ" does not always mean all the real stops of an organ; furthermore, that whenever the superscription says, "for two rows of Keys and Pedal," only soft stops ought to be used.

In the Prelude No. 6, on the Corale "Oh, Lamb of God," it appears necessary to change the stops at the beginning of each new verse, so that the third verse is played with the greatest number of stops (perhaps towards the end with the full organ). In No. 2 also, "Come, Holy Ghost," I would recommend here and there to change the stops after the termination of the different periods of the Cantus firmus, or gradually to increase the power of the organ to the end. In No. 3, "On the rivers of Babylon," most probably only an 8 feet Pedal is meant, without any 16 feet stops.

Mendelssohn edited fifty-nine of the Chorale-preludes for Coventry and Hollier. In one of his letters to the publishers he says, "Perhaps nine out of these fifty-nine are known: all the rest are not." In a subsequent letter (also written in English) he gives his opinion upon the connection of Bach's name only with fugues. He says:

Frankfort, December 17, 1844.

Pray alter the inscription which is to be found at the bottom of every page, Fugues, &c. Why is Bach's name always connected with Fugues? He has had more to do with Psalm tunes than with Fugues; and you call the beginning of your collection "Bach's Studies," which I like much better. Pray alter this, and call it either "Studies," "Organ-pieces," or "Chorales," or as you like, but not Fugues. Let me know before it is issued the title which the work is to have in English; perhaps you will send me a copy of it with the next proofs.

The Bach Society (of London) was founded October 27, 1849, at a meeting convened by and held at the house of Sterndale Bennett, 15, Russell Place, Fitzroy Square. Bennett was elected president. Mr. William Dorrell was treasurer, and Dr. Charles Steggall, from first to last, honorary secretary. Both gentlemen are happily still amongst us. The "primary objects" of the Society were thus set forth:

I. The collection of the musical works of John Sebastian Bach, including as far as practicable all the various Editions extant; also copies of all available authentic Manuscripts, and all Biographical works relating to him and his family, with a view of forming a Library of reference for the use of Members.

II. The furtherance and promotion of a general acquaintance with the numerous Vocal and Instrumental works of this great and comparatively unknown Master, chiefly by performances—the frequency and extent of which must be governed by the means at the Society's disposal.

The first rehearsal was held on March 21, 1850, and the first performance took place on the following July 29 (July 28 being a Sunday), in commemoration of the centenary of Bach's death. It was for the Bach Society that an English version of Bach's Six Motets (of which "I wrestle and pray" is not by Sebastian Bach) was prepared, and published by subscription, in 1850-51, by Ewer and Co. These Motets are now in the catalogue of Messrs. Novello and Co. The words were translated by William Bartholomew, and the music was edited by Dr. Steggall. "Bennett," records Dr. Steggall, "was unwilling that I should write a piano accompaniment, and desired me merely to condense the score. I took him at his word, and compressed the eight parts into two staves, to the consternation of the engraver and no small risk to my own eyesight." A folio edition of the "St. Matthew" Passion, translated by Miss Helen F. H. Johnston, and edited by Sterndale Bennett, was published by subscription in 1862.

The greatest achievement of the Bach Society was the first performance in England of Bach's "St Matthew" Passion, which took place at the Hanover Square Rooms, April 6, 1854. Sterndale Bennett conducted, and Mr. (now Dr.) E. J. Hopkins presided at the organ. Between the parts, Bennett went up to Dr. Hopkins to thank him for his help in supporting the voices. "You have been quite a prop to us," said Bennett. "I'd rather be a prop than a stick," was the ready reply of the genial Temple organist. Amongst those who occupied humble places in the chorus on that occasion was a young tenor named Cummings, who afterwards sang the solo tenor music with true artistic excellence, and also a ruddy chorister boy from St. Paul's, John Stainer by name.

Sir John Stainer has very kindly sent me his recollections of the event in the following autobiographical note:

I was born in 1840, so I was only nine years old when the Bach Society was founded. I was one among the very first of those who regularly attended rehearsals, to which I was escorted by an elder sister. The rehearsals were held at the Store Street Rooms, and sometimes at the Royal Academy of Music in Tenterden Street. But I have a most vivid recollection of a series of rehearsals held in Gray and Davison's organ factory. At these Dr. Steggall accompanied us splendidly on the organ. I admired his playing very much, and I remember being for the first time introduced to him at one of those early rehearsals. Also I remember that he laughed heartily when I asked him whether he had pedalled all the running bass part of the chorus, "Have lightnings and thunders." The Misses Johnston attended regularly (there were, I think, two sisters), and the Passions Musik was in process of translation by them, fresh sheets of lithographed music being produced at each rehearsal.

It was at one of these rehearsals at the organ-builders' that Hogarth [then the musical critic of the Daily News] said: "Mr. Bennett, couldn't we have a little expression in the Chorales?" adding words to the effect that they were too beautiful to be sung at one dead level of sound. Bennett replied, "Oh! yes, by all means; there are none in the original, but I see no objection to some being introduced." They were accordingly introduced, but always included in a parenthesis—(p), (f), &c., and I think were so printed in the first English folio edition. That was the veritable origin of the expression marks to the Chorales.

I have luckily preserved my card of thanks for taking part in the first performance. It is very tasteful, the inscription being in a gothic border. I enclose a copy of the wording at your request.

The "card of thanks," a copy of which was given to each performer, was couched in the following terms:

The Bach Society.
Instituted 1849.

The Committee beg gratefully to acknowledge the services of

Master John Stainer

on the occasion of the 1st Performance in England, under the direction of W. Sterndale Bennett, of the Grosse Passions Musik

John Sebastian Bach.

Hanover Rooms, April 6th, 1854.

It may not be generally known that some of the actual vocal parts (all in manuscript) which Mendelssohn used for the revival of the "St. Matthew" Passion in 1829, at Berlin, were sent over to Bennett, probably for his guidance in preparing the work for the first London performance. These parts, which are now in the possession of Messrs. Novello and Co., bear interesting traces of Mendelssohn's careful preparation of the work, as shown by the expression and other marks inserted in pencil by his own hand.

The "St. Matthew" Passion was repeated by the Bach Society, November 28, 1854; a third performance, on March 23, 1858, was honoured by the presence of the Prince Consort. Other concerts included eleven movements of the B minor Mass, at King's College, July 24, 1860, and the "Christmas Oratorio," for the first time in England, June 13, 1861. The Bach Society, which had done useful work, was dissolved on March 21, 1870.

Its dying embers had scarcely had time to cool before the Bach fire was rekindled in such a manner that it has never ceased to burn brightly, nor is there any likelihood of its effulgent glow being dulled by the damping influences of indifference or neglect. The opportunity came with the Oratorio Concerts, instituted by Messrs. Novello in 1869. With the opportunity came the man, in the person of Mr. (afterwards Sir) Joseph Barnby, to whom choral singing in England owes so much. Those who remember the early rehearsals of the Oratorio Choir, held in a dingy little hall off Oxford Street, when "young Docker," as we called him, played the accompaniments on an upright piano, will recall Barnby's thoroughness and zeal in drilling the chorus for those concerts. A memorably fine performance of the "St. Matthew" Passion was given at the Oratorio Concert (not the Sacred Harmonic Society), Exeter Hall, April 6, 1870, under Barnby's direction. The principal vocalists were Madame Rudersdorff, Madame Sainton-Dolby, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas; and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided at the organ. An octavo edition of the music was issued for this performance, which marked a new era in the history of the work. Sir George Macfarren contributed a series of critical articles on the "St. Matthew" Passion to this journal from January to April, 1870.

On Maunday Thursday, April 6, 1871, exactly a year after the Exeter Hall performance, the "Passion" Music found its true home—that of the church—within the venerable walls of Westminster Abbey, where Bach's great contemporary, Handel, sleeps the sleep of death. It is needless to say that the surroundings were in perfect keeping with the sublimity of the music. This memorable service (the musical portion of which was conducted by Barnby) commenced with "The Order of Evening Prayer" down to "The Lord's Name be praised." After the chorus "Have lightnings and thunders," a sermon was preached by Dean Stanley. With the advent of Sir John Stainer as organist of St. Paul's, in 1872, it was in the natural order of things that the example of Westminster Abbey should be followed by the Metropolitan Cathedral. Accordingly the first performance of the "St. Matthew" Passion in St. Paul's was given on Tuesday in Holy Week, April 8, 1873, under Sir John Stainer's direction. Thus was initiated the most profoundly solemn service that is held in the Cathedral throughout the year.

Bach's B minor Mass had hitherto fared somewhat badly in England. The "Farewell Symphony" performance of a portion of it at the Ancient Concerts has already been referred to; and also of the eleven movements given by the Bach Society. John Hullah performed the "Credo," March 19, 1851, and Henry Leslie gave the "Sanctus" twice in 1868. But the complete work had never been presented to an English audience. In the year 1875 a special choir was formed for the production of the Mass in its entirety. Under the able direction of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, rehearsals were held during the winter months at the house of Sir Charles and Lady Freake, which, mainly through the good offices of Mr. Arthur Duke Coleridge, was generously placed by them at the disposal of the choir. Supplementary rehearsals for the ladies of the choir were held concurrently, at her own house, by Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt, who, in the spirit of a great and true artist, led the sopranos of the chorus at the full rehearsals and at the performances. The first performance of Bach's B minor Mass in England was at St. James's Hall, April 26, 1876, under Mr. Otto Goldschmidt's direction. This interesting occasion had far-reaching results for the propagation of Bach's music in England. To quote from the official word-book of March 21, 1885:

> The object for which the special Choir was formed having thus been accomplished, the desirability of keeping together such a trained body of singers as a permanent association became obvious, and thus a Society was formed, having for its object the study and production (not of Bach's music exclusively, but) of choral works of excellence of various schools; and, in commemoration of the circumstances of its origin, was named The Bach Choir, the post of Musical Director being offered to and accepted by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt.

The Bach Choir worthily commemorated the Bi-centenary of John Sebastian Bach's birth by a Festival performance of the B minor Mass at the Royal Albert Hall, March 21, 1885, being the 200th anniversary of the composer's birthday. Mr. Otto Goldschmidt conducted, and Sir John Stainer presided at the organ. The band and chorus numbered 600 performers, and the Mass had never before been presented on such a large scale. Mr. Goldschmidt spared no pains in making the performance worthy of the occasion, even to the extent of getting some of the obsolete instruments in the score remanufactured, "including the oboi d'amore and the peculiar high-pitched trumpet, for which a player was fetched from Berlin."

The excellent work of the Bach Choir (now under the efficient conductorship of Professor Villiers Stanford) is too well known to need comment; suffice it to say that having given upwards of fifty concerts, it continues to flourish with undiminished vigour and prosperity. How it would have rejoiced the hearts of Wesley and Mendelssohn if they could have known of an annual Bach Festival in London!

Mention must be made of a magnificent rendering of the great B minor Mass at the Leeds Festival of 1886, under the direction of Sir Arthur Sullivan. It has been said that "Sullivan nearly killed himself over that performance," so completely did he throw himself, body and soul, into the preparation and presentation of Bach's colossal work. The rendering of the "Osanna" has been described as literally overwhelming.

By way of conclusion to these fragmentary notes on "Bach's Music in England," I may refer to the English version of Spitta's great biographical work—his "Johann Sebastian Bach," translated by Mrs. Clara Bell and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, which Messrs. Novello issued between 1883-85. F. G. E.

IS BEETHOVEN PLAYED OUT?

By George Verdant Bouncingham.

I own to having a considerable kindness for Beethoven. Indeed, were it not for the absurd attempts made in certain quarters to claim absolute finality for his achievements in every department of modern music, I imght have allowed this discrowned King of Sound a short reprieve. But, as that other old dodderer Shakespeare remarks: "If 'twere done, 'twere well 'twere done quickly." It is iniquitous for those who revel in supreme enlightenment to refrain from emancipating their less gifted brethren from a state of ghastly fetish-worship. And it is distinctly unkind to Beethoven himself to flatter him into the persuasion that his immortality is secured, when, as a matter of fact, it is undermined on every side by the corrosives of the new criticism. Again, it must be remembered that I have recently carried through, with a really reckless expenditure of coruscating invective, a long, arduous, but entirely triumphant campaign against the ineffable impostor Mendelssohn. The jerry-built prestige of that sickly charlatan lies blasted into infinitesimal smithereens beneath the vitriolic onset of my indomitable stylograph. I have imported into the domain of English musical criticism the most aggravated features of the Judenhetze. I have violated all the decencies of professional etiquette, and when any of my colleagues have dared to express views that differ from mine, I have promptly pilloried them by name, and published elaborate details as to washing bills. I have done all this and more. I have libelled pedants, pulverised professors, thundered at the gates of Kensington Gore, and sapped the foundations of Tenterden Street. And still, in the immortal phrase of the classic comedian, I am not happy. I want another punching-block, a new Aunt Sally. Something, in short, that I can kick, cuff, pummel, bash, and knock-out to my heart's content. Now there is art in the choice of an Aunt Sally as in that of other things, and speaking from a pretty exhaustive and exhausting acquaintance, I am bound to admit that there are some serious drawbacks connected with the process of "going for" an antagonist who is still in the land of the living. The creature, for example, may run shrieking to the Law Courts, or shoot you at sight, or behave in some similarly unpropitious and ungentlemanly way. But with a dead opponent you are simply on velvet. And thus, having already wiped the floor with the unspeakable Mendelssohn, I have decided to repeat that salutary and instructive process with the remains of the Bonn gentleman. Some fatuous owl may remark, "Why, I've heard you crack up Beethoven like anything." My good fool, of course you have. But permit me to observe that there is no finality about my critical attitude. It is everlastingly expanding and developing. There was a time when I adored Toy Symphonies; now I confess to finding the scoring of the "Walkürenritt" decidedly thin. Besides, as I have said above, I must have an Aunt Sally, and I won't be happy till I get it.

I think I shall have no difficulty in convincing all but the most bestial of bank clerks that my views on Beethoven are in no wise the result of temper or petty personal bias. I have given the man every chance. Years ago, when I used to play the violoncello worse than the vilest passenger in the Philharmonic orchestra, I was everlastingly scraping away at his posthumous quartets. But I frankly own that I could make nothing of them. As a boy I almost persuaded myself into believing that I admired the pomatumy clap-trap of the "Moonlight" Sonata, or the sickly goody-goodiness of the Allegretto of the Seventh Symphony. Now and again the puissant magnetism of Mottl has almost redeemed me to the half-baked ineptitudes of the C minor. But shorn of the adventitious glamour conferred upon them by a great conductor or a great artist like D'Albert or myself, Beethoven's scores simply will not stand the test of performance. What can be more insufferably coarse than his tuttis; more tedious than his never-ending perorations; more fatuous than his habit of repeating some footling little phrase sixty billion times over and over again; more outrageous than his disgraceful infatuation for the drum? I frankly confess that I do not at all like agreeing with any other contemporary critic, but when Mr. Henry Finck says that Beethoven did not understand the genius of the pianoforte, I am obliged to say ditto to that gentleman. Still, grant that Beethoven's musical thoughts were cheap and nasty, that his instrumentation was thin, that as a conductor he was not fit to black Mottl's boots, and that as a writer for the voice he is beneath the contempt of such an artist as the incomparable Bispham—grant all this, and yet the man might be allowed some title to consideration if it were not for the damning and loathsome stain that besmirches his connection with this country. Beethoven took money from the Philharmonic Society! In those seven words a whole Iliad of guilt is summed up. But this is not the worst. He not only took hundreds of pounds from that atrocious institution—that Cloaca Maxima of iniquity—but he actually wrote and spoke of it in terms of gratitude and even enthusiasm! Now the man who would behave in such a way is anathema. He has sinned against decency and the light, and may expect no quarter from me. There are many black pages in the annals of music, but this is the blackest of them all. Needless to say, the Philharmonic Society has made all possible capital out of this deplorable incident, and the bust of Beethoven is always in evidence at their concerts, as though the unhappy composer were condemned to do perpetual public penance for his crass and inconceivable turpitude.

That Beethoven was the parasitic pensioner and fulsome eulogist of the Philharmonic Society immeasurably outweighs, in my opinion, any slim or niggling services he may have rendered the evolution of art. It brands him at once as an excerebrose scallywag, an eviscerated elasmobranch, worthy of being hurled neck and crop along with Mendelssohn into the limbo of discredited desuetude. When you come to think of it, however, it is no more than might have been expected of a man who beslavered the Viennese aristocracy with dedications instinct with sickening snobbery, and actually fell in love with a countess! There is another very painful trait in Beethoven which has never yet met with the reprobation it so thoroughly deserves. I refer to his ridiculous and contemptible deference to the dictates of conventional morality, as illustrated by his choice of an opera book. It is said that he rejected heaps of librettos on the ground of their immorality! What a melancholy confession of weakness on the part of a would-be great man. He wanted, forsooth, a theme which should glorify and exalt a love that was at once pure and devoted, thus deliberately shutting his eyes to the great and noble truth that it is only by perpetually trampling on the decalogue that the artist can ever justify his existence. Whenever I am condemned for my sins to witness a performance of "Fidelio," I thank my stars that the young Italians have at least rendered such "books" impossible in the future, and have proved to demonstration the incalculably superior æsthetic attractiveness of squalor and suicide as compared with the bogus Biblical shoddy affected by Mendelssohn and Beethoven. The story of Leonora, had it been treated by De Maupassant or Zola, or even Gyp, might have been endurable—even amusing. But in the form adopted by Beethoven it reeks of the proprieties of Peckham; it is as ditch-watery as a small tea-party at Denmark Hill.

Last, and most significant of all, Beethoven was no controversialist. So far as I have been able to make out, he never formulated his views in a literary form, or analysed and vindicated his own system, or abused his contemporaries in the public prints. I know that some drivelling dolts probably applaud this attitude as indicative of a dignified artistic reserve. For my own part, I can see nothing in it but the most contemptible and culpable cowardice. The artist who has not at his fingers' ends the entire vocabulary of Billingsgate and Bargeedom, and who is not capable of turning on the hose of his invective at a moment's notice full blast on the devoted head of anyone who ventures to differ from him in the smallest particular, is simply not worth a twopenny tinker's curse. Beethoven would never have been a good musical critic. He had neither the brutality, nor the egotism, nor the entire absence of humour which are indispensable to the adequate discharge of the duties of such an office. There are scores of other weighty reasons for answering the question at the head of this article in the affirmative, but the foregoing may suffice. Beethoven could not compose. Beethoven was the protégé of the Philharmonic Society. Beethoven respected the Ten Commandments. Beethoven was no journalist. In the face of these appalling crimes and my cool and dispassionate exposure of them, I do not think that anyone will want to exhume the Bonn gentleman again.

The recent issue of Mrs. Cowden Clarke's pleasant book, "My long life," recalls the fact of the close friendship which existed between Charles Lamb and the Novello family. "The gods have made me most unmusical," wrote the author of the "Essays of Elia." Yet notwithstanding this natural defect, which he shared with many other literary men, Lamb would thoroughly enjoy the many opportunities he had for "the feast of reason and the flow of soul" under Vincent Novello's hospitable roof. He characteristically makes fun of Novello's "collecting" hobby in the following letter, which, strangely enough, does not find a place in Canon Ainger's "Letters of Charles Lamb" (2 vols., Macmillan, 1888). Novello's endorsement on the letter may precede Lamb's droll epistle. Novello says: "A very characteristic note from Dear Charles Lamb, who always pretended to Rate all kinds of memorials and Relics, and assumed a look of fright and horror whenever he reproached me with being a Papish, instead of a Quaker, which sect he pretended to dote upon." The letter itself, which is undated, reads: "Dear N.,—Pray write immediately to say 'The book has come safe.' I am anxious, not so much for the autographs, as for that bit of the hair brush. I inclose a cinder which belonged to Shield, when he was poor, and lit his own fires. Any memorial of a great Musical Genius, I know, is acceptable; and Shield has his merits, though Clementi, in my opinion, is far above him in the Sostenuto. Mr. Westwood [Lamb's landlord] desires his compliments, and begs to present you with a nail that came out of Jomelli's coffin, who is buried at Naples." Lamb, in his "Chapter on Ears," tells us that one musical term was as obscure to him as another; therefore the subtlety of his genial humour irresistibly peeps out in his "opinion" of Clementi's excellence in the Sostenuto! The "bit of the hair brush" and the "cinder" as memorials of a great (? grate) musical genius, are in Lamb's merriest vein. But they must give place to the "nail that came out of Jomelli's coffin." There we have Charles at his best. Few could beat that.

From all parts of the country come in increasing numbers accounts of church services in which employment has been made of orchestral instruments. The foundation of the Church Orchestral Society, by the Honourable Richard Strutt, and the hearty support given it by Sir John Stainer, has furthered in great measure this desirable movement, and its progress has been assisted in no small degree by the individual efforts of organists, whose endeavours deserve cordial commendation. No doubt many other causes, less apparent but no less powerful, are working in the same direction; but whatever they are, there is more reason for satisfaction in the movement than is commonly perceived. Although the chief characteristic of the church-goer is the appreciation of a service, every detail of which has been prepared and carefully studied, the absolute necessity of rehearsal of the musical portion is realised by few, and, when admitted, often regarded as an unfortunate necessity. While, however, the singing of the choir would appear to be regarded by many as a spontaneous act, and the playing of the organist as a matter of course, the sound of other instruments suggests to most people painstaking practice and a certain amount of artistic ability. Thus when, by the employment of an orchestra, the impressiveness of a service is obviously increased, the powerful aid that art can render in stimulating religious associations is manifested in a manner which is calculated to appeal with the utmost directness and force to the majority of worshippers. Now it is just this acknowledgment of the power of art when rightly employed which is needed to secure and preserve the habitual use of high-class music in our churches, and to raise and maintain a high executive standard. Apart, therefore, from the material aid to the objects of worship that the employment of orchestral instruments can render, their presence in churches is to be encouraged as conducive to more generous appreciation and support of the office of music, and as a practice which is calculated to exert a beneficial influence on the art and its professors.

In the autumn of last year there left England, in order to pass the remaining years of his life in his peaceful home at Jugenheim, amid flowers, fruit, and trees, and where the pure air is not poisoned by smoke, our distinguished pianist and teacher of the pianoforte, Professor Ernst Pauer. We advisedly say "our" distinguished pianist, because forty-five years of residence in this country, and of unbroken hard work in our English schools of music, the Royal Academy, Royal College, Guildhall School, and the tentative National Training School entitle Mr. Pauer to the citizenship of our land as well as the gratitude of all those who know how important and widespread his influence has been. His vast array of pupils, old and young, would have liked to send him away with some substantial token of their regard and respect; but he generously begged them, if his memory was dear to them, to perpetuate it by founding an Exhibition at the Royal College of Music, in which Institution he showed the greatest interest from the first day of its existence. The fund, though not yet closed, has already reached a goodly sum, and many a young aspirant in future time will have reason to recall gratefully the unselfishness of him whose name the Exhibition will bear. On the 21st inst. Mr. Pauer will keep his seventieth birthday, and he may be assured that many, very many, in this country will heartily wish him that health, happiness, and repose which he so well deserves.

Dr. William Pole, whose career has been doubly distinguished by his musical gifts and his scientific skill, has sent the following interesting letter to Mr. F. G. Edwards, in reference to his articles on "Bach's Music in England." Dr. Pole writes:

I have read with much pleasure the account you have given in The Musical Times of the early introduction of Bach's organ music in England, and perhaps you may be interested to know a little personal reminiscence I have of Jacob's duet arrangement of the "St. Ann's Fugue." For some years after 1830 I was receiving instruction in organ playing and music generally, in Birmingham, from Thomas Munden, one of the most eminent professors there. He had been, I believe, brought up in Westminster Abbey, under Greatorex, and had a high estimate of counterpoint. I recollect that the first lesson on the organ he gave me was from Greatorex's "Parochial Psalmody," a book of tunes harmonised with interesting counterpoint (in four staves, with the proper clefs), and he told me that I must not look at the organ arrangement below, which was for the less educated public, but must learn to play from the vocal score. He told me about Sebastian Bach, whose organ music was but little known, and one day he brought me a copy of Jacob's duet arrangement of the "St. Ann's" and played it with me. It was quite a new revelation, and I was much struck with the remark about its difficulty for a single player. I told Mr. Munden I should like to try and learn it, but there was no single copy to be had. "Oh!" said he, "write it out in five lines, and play from that." I did so (I have this score still by me), and after due practice I succeeded in playing it, as well as the old G organ pedals would allow me.

In 1835 I came to live in London, and accidentally made the acquaintance of Henry John Gauntlett, to whom the "St. Ann's Fugue" was a sufficient introduction. He engaged me to be his deputy, and made me join in the "Recitals" which he frequently gave on his newly designed organ, at Christ Church, Newgate Street. And he introduced me personally to the three most celebrated organists of that day—Thomas Attwood, Samuel Wesley (Senior), and Vincent Novello, from all of whom I obtained testimonials that were very gratifying. And for all this I considered myself indebted to Benjamin Jacob's arrangement of the "St. Ann's Fugue"!

The history of Samuel Sebastian Wesley's fine anthem "The Wilderness," like that of its gifted composer, has yet to be written. A foot-note on the first page of the folio edition of "The Wilderness" states that it was "composed for the re-opening of a Cathedral organ, 1831." If the date be correct, this would be the year before Wesley went to Hereford. As we have failed to trace the location of that particular Cathedral through the ordinary channels of information, we should be very glad if any of the cathedral organists, or others amongst our readers, could enlighten us. It would be interesting for any cathedral official to be able to say that Wesley's "Wilderness" was composed for the re-opening of "our organ."

The committee of the Bayreuth Festspiele have now definitely decided to repeat the performances of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" next year, in alternation with those of "Parsifal," the former to be given three times and the latter eight.

THE SINGER AND THE CYCLE.

Oh, do not fancy that this means
The Singer, maker of machines—
Mere subtle advertising.
I am the singer, one who sings,
A victim of those dreadful things—
The craze is quite surprising.

Now to my doleful tale give heed,
I always scrupulously read
This publication's pages.
So far you ought to do the same,
And, monthly, learn the praise or blame
Of critics and of sages.

I noticed in the August part
That singers fearlessly may start
A bicycle, and ride it;
The voice is safe, so doctors say.
Imagine, then, one summer day
My "bike," and me beside it.

A country garden was the scene,
A pleasant spot, retired, serene,
A sturdy friend impelled me;
I learnt the getting on and off,
No grinning boys were there to scoff,
No pretty girls beheld me.

Next day I ventured on a road,
A level one, and further showed
It was a simple matter.
Alas! I since discovered that
I, like the level road, was flat,
And after, even flatter.

For, growing bold, another day
I rode my bicycle away,
A blissful ignoramus.
I fear I showed a little "side,"
You may have noticed that such pride
May cause a fall to shame us.

It did. I hastened down a hill,
I feel the keen sensation still,
"The poetry of motion."
It soon was over, so was I;
A pig was there, a pond close by,
What happened I've no notion.

They pulled me from the muddy pond,
My bike, of which I was so fond,
Was smashed to bits they tell me;
My clothes were ruined by the dirt,
The pig alone was quite unhurt,
But worse than this befell me.

I hurt my leg, my arm, my head,
Bronchitis kept me weeks in bed,
To silence yet restricts me;
That pond's effects I still endure,
Because the doctors cannot cure
The hoarseness which afflicts me.

[Our poetical contributor, notwithstanding his commendably zealous perusal of our pages, apparently overlooked the remarks of Madame Mathilde Marchesi, the celebrated vocal teacher, on the practice of cycling with regard to the singing voice (October issue, p. 682). She says: "It is the crowning folly on the part of certain teachers to specially recommend the practice to their pupils. It may assist in developing the lungs of the more robust persons, but as regards the vocal organs, and the more delicate constitutions, I maintain that the rapid passage through the air may be a positive source of danger. I therefore prohibit this sport amongst all my singing birds."—Ed., M.T.]

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

Mr. W. F. Apthorp has been writing about that deplorable phenomenon in music—fashion. More power to him, albeit he can even now hit hard. I make one extract, which may amuse or shame the reader, according to circumstances:

After Joseffy has played the Waldstein Sonata, Rosenthal has played the Waldstein Sonata, well nigh all the big bugs have played the Waldstein Sonata—what next? Why, here comes Tom, Dick, and Harry, and one and all play the Waldstein Sonata at their come-out recitals. Now, do these small fry of the pianoforte play the Waldstein Sonata simply because they have just been fired by vaulting ambition? Hm! Is it not rather on the principle on which, after seeing a tall, slim, graceful young woman look beautiful (if preposterous) in huge puffed sleeves and bell skirt, the short, chunky, and no longer young woman cannot rest until she has made herself to look preposterous (without looking beautiful) in similar attire? Has not sheer fashion had something to do with it? Come, lay your hand upon your hearts, and say it is not so.

This does not represent the worst. Present fashion implies past fashions, to which many good works belong. But nobody may display them. As soon would a woman go into the streets wearing last season's hat.

"Hark! hark, I hear the strains of chanticleer!" The musical critic of the Ulmer Tageblatt was recently fined thirty marks and costs in the Law Courts for ungallantly comparing the vocal efforts of a local prima donna to the "crowing of a cock." It certainly does seem one of the "things one would rather have expressed differently."

The following advertisement is a curiosity in its way, and because the advertiser deserves to succeed I give it unmutilated:

Wanted, Work, as Handy Man; used to gardening, horses, &c., good milker, where elementary instruction in Singing or Organ will be given in lieu of wages. Willing to go anywhere or do anything to advance education. Address, "Musical," North Wilts Herald Office, Swindon.

The Bishop of Coventry, preaching at the opening of an organ in Leamington, said: "It (music) speaks of another world. If this world were all, and everything were pure machinery, as some would have us believe, why should there be any music, why should there be any such thing as growing refinement in music, why should we be learning more and more the beauty of music?" Somehow, I do not follow the Bishop's argument. It seems to me that if our little life extends not beyond this world, the reason is great why it should be blessed with all of beauty that can console us for so short a span. To imagine the contrary is, I should say, beyond the capacity of non-theological minds. Music is with us, and it is better, perhaps, not to go behind the gift.

Mr. Cliffe's new Violin Concerto is to be played at one of the Philharmonic Concerts next season, and Mr. Sarasate will be the violinist at another Concert. The directors have invited the Sclavonic composer, Glazounow, to visit England. He has accepted, and will introduce his Fourth Symphony. In the course of the season Mr. Ben Davies will sing a scena expressly written for him by Mr. F. H. Cowen.

The composer just-named is putting the finishing touches to his Idyllic Symphony, and, industrious as ever, has other works in mind. I am glad to hear that the Manchester and Liverpool concerts, conducted by Mr. Cowen in succession to Sir Charles Hallé, are prospering greatly.

Dr. Turpin's inaugural address to the students of Trinity College, London, delivered on October 6, is not yet too ancient for notice, fast as we travel in these days. I am glad to find the learned Warden among musical optimists in believing that the true progress of musical art is not materially hindered by unreasoning impulses on the one hand or reactionary forces on the other. That has always been my faith, and a very comfortable one it is. I quote a sentence which is true as gospel: "Although the balance between the advancing and retrograde impulses has not been at all times nicely adjusted, and critics have been prone to fear, in Mr. Ruskin's words: 'It was not the Parnassian but the Tarpeian rock which the new enthusiasts were ascending,' the instincts and earnestness of genius, not uninfluenced by a healthy external public opinion, almost invariably set matters right, and turn all such movements into lasting good."

Although belief in the foregoing hopeful statement promotes cheerfulness and confidence, it does not excuse any of us from opposing what we consider to be false and injurious. Providence may take upon itself the task of shaping musical ends, but it is our business to rough hew them, and to do it with all energy, according to the light that is in us. Our views may not accord with the majority, but never mind. A genuine advance in human faith and practice is always the resultant of many forces.

It appears in the Kolnische Zeitung that English musical critics are welded together by a strong esprit de corps. I rub my eyes, but the words are there still.

I was charged the other day, by a foolish or malicious Bristol person, with comparing the festival choirs of Bristol and Sheffield, not having heard the Westerners. Of course he was wrong, and very likely he knew it. I wonder how it is with Dr. Krebs of the Vossiche Zeitung. He is accused in much the same way, in connection with the recent revivals of "Le Nozze di Figaro," at Berlin and Munich. His fellow-journalists are down upon him, in testimony, I suppose, of esprit de corps.

I read somewhere, a few days ago, that the Symphonies of Brahms are dull and dry, and that we are all heartily tired of the "Pastoral." It is not for me to mock at these statements; there is room in the world for all opinions. What I am anxious to know is how many and what works will be left to us when such compositions as those named are put under ban.

I find it stated in an American paper, dated October 1 last, that "to an Englishman or a Canadian their own Arabella Goddard is the highest standard of pianoforte playing." Strangely enough the article in which these words appear is not signed by Rip Van Winkle.

A "misguided young English girl" gave a Recital in Berlin recently, broke down, and did not finish her task. So we are told by a correspondent with a German name. Should we have been told anything of the kind had the girl not been English? 'Tis a funny world.

Considering the appearance of Sheffield among festival cities, it may be useful to publish for future reference some notes on the musical antecedents of the place which have reached me from an authoritative source:

In 1755 (that is, four years before Handel died), Snetzler built an organ in St. Paul's Church, Sheffield.

In 1762, Assembly Rooms and a Theatre were added to the then primitive attractions of the town.

In 1769, Musical Society was established and performances of Handel's oratorios (in particular) became somewhat frequent; but it was not until 1786 that any attempt was made to perform oratorio music on a large scale. But in that year what may be considered the first Sheffield Musical Festival took place. This is briefly mentioned in Sir George Grove's Dictionary. It was a three days affair, and in this respect eclipses even the Festival of this year, which is one of two days only.

In 1794, an organ was erected by Donaldson in St. James's Church, and, as was the custom of the time, festive character was given to it by the performance of an oratorio in the church and an evening concert at the theatre.

In 1805, however, there took place a most important three days' "Grand Musical Festival," in connection with the opening after a rebuild of the old parish church. A London orchestra was engaged, under the leadership of Mr. Cramer (brother of J. B. Cramer), and the principals included the then celebrated Miss Parke, and Messrs. Harrison and Bartleman. Mr. Goss (father of the late Sir John Goss) sang several alto solos. Mr. Robert Lindley was principal violoncello. The chorus was "particularly numerous and selected from the West Riding of Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Lancashire," &c.

Two features of interest in regard to this Festival are—(1) that although the expenses amounted to £833 9s. 11d., there was a balance of £306 7s. 2d. to hand over to the local Infirmary, and (2) that Handel's "Messiah" was, for the first time in Sheffield, performed with (as the programmes stated) the enrichment of "Mozart's much admired accompaniments of instruments as performed at Vienna with unbounded applause." On all three days after the oratorio in church there was a secular concert in the theatre, and, to give a finish to the affair, of course a ball!

On April 13, 1816, what Sheffielders look upon as a great musical event took place, for William Sterndale Bennett was born—no one knows now for a certainty where—but it is conjectured, and is most probable, that he was born in what is now known as Howard Street; but his father, Robert Bennett, organist of the parish church, moved about a good deal during his residence in the town. Young Sterndale, though born at Sheffield, really had no connection with the town musically, for at three years of age his father died, and he was removed to the care of his grandfather at Cambridge.

In 1823 another "Musical Festival" was held in the parish church and theatre on a somewhat smaller scale; but the artists engaged included Mrs. Salmon, Mr. Sapio, and Mr. Robert Lindley, with Mr. Mori as leader. The receipts at this Festival—£220—were given to the local charity schools.

Some of the late Henry Abbey's artists took no notice of his death, it appears, and were duly punished by finding themselves described as "a set of thin-blooded harpies, artists though they be, without any sense of gratitude or decency." The punishment fits the crime.

A man likes to see his own favourite parable taken up and carried on. Wherefore I hail the following remarks by a writer (Hanslick?) in the Neue Freie Presse:—

In our age of huge choruses and giant orchestras it is supposed that a manager can attract music-lovers by promising them something prodigious. More than seven hundred musicians! More than a thousand singers! This "more than" serves as a powerful magnet at every festival; it is the mighty trumpet of réclame, to which the ears of our century are growing accustomed. If we trace the course of this century we can easily see that by a certain kind of law, with an increment that can be put down in figures, it becomes more noisy and more noise-demanding. One decade surpasses another, the clangour of the universe increases from year to year, and, if necessary, it could be shown that every month is a bit louder than its predecessor. In music, which already is to many ears the worst of all noises, this tendency to the enormous is especially violent, and often expressed in the most grotesque exaggerations. . . . But what is the use of talking? Just open your window and listen to the street. Much of this street noise has found its way into the modern orchestra. In the exuberance of its Klang colour, in its hundred-voiced confusion, it can scarcely be called an orchestra, it is a thunder-storm. If we could recall to life a music-lover of the last century and let loose the fortissimo of a modern symphony he would take to his heels.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

The managers of this triennial feast for the Potteries proceed with caution. Their natural ambition is, of course, to swell the Festival to the dimensions of those at Leeds, Birmingham, and elsewhere, making four days of music. To that end, however, an advance by slow degrees is safest and best. This fact the committee recognise, and will act upon, until a forward step can be taken with assurance as nearly absolute as possible. At the first Festival, if I remember rightly, four Concerts were given, occupying two days. But it was found that the busy folk of the Potteries could not—or would not, which amounted to the same thing—support the morning performances in adequate numbers. Subsequently one of these was taken out, leaving one morning and two evenings. Such was the arrangement on the occasion of which I have now to speak, and it was duly and successfully carried out; the dates being October 29 and 30; the place, Victoria Hall, Hanley.

It must be said for the North Staffordshire men that they have thoroughly well equipped their Festival, and that the whole affair runs smoothly to the end in view. This means that not only have they a capital chorus, strong in numbers, knowledge, and enthusiasm, an adequate orchestra, which, though gathered from various quarters, settles down immediately into a homogeneous and efficient body, and, in the person of Dr. Swinnerton Heap, a conductor of uncommon ability; but also that the complicated machinery, which alone can run such an enterprise, is all in its place and in good working order. The public see little of this, but it must be there or they would see nothing at all.

The fewer the performances the more difficult it is to draw up a programme, because the works justly claiming attention do not diminish in proportion. On the whole, however, the committee solved their problem very well by selecting prominent representatives of classical choral and orchestral works in the "Hymn of Praise" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; by conceding to the claims of novelty an important new work in Mr. Elgar's "Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf," and by choosing from among choral compositions of recent date Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." Other selections included "The Mount of Olives" and Barnby's Psalm "The Lord is King." Great and varied interest must be recognised in such a programme as this, and with it enlightened judgment in the choosing.

At the first Concert, the "Hymn of Praise," "The Lord is King," and the "Mount of Olives" were associated. Truly a sufficient feast even for the most hungry, and to it, as far as I could make out, the public brought the best of appetites. They sat out the programme, at any rate, with exemplary zest, and only erred by the excess of enthusiasm which prompts an audience to put applause in the wrong place. Music and hand-clapping, excellent in sequence, are not tolerable when simultaneous. May I say that the performers romped through the "Lobgesang"? No! the term is not wholly appropriate, but it serves to express the confidence with which the work was done, and the complete success that attended it. Barnby's music, less well-known, was not marked in performance by equal assurance; nevertheless the straightforward, thoroughly English choral music came out with great effect, especially the opening number. As regards the soloists of the evening, only words of praise are called for, and to words of praise Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies are well accustomed. The contralto, Miss Marie Hooton, is not so well known, or so advanced in her art; but she has a beautiful voice, and, with study and experience, other requisites should come. The tenor, in "I called through the darkness," and the baritone, in Barnby's "Confounded be all they," were most excellent.

The morning of the second day brought with it the novelty, Mr. Elgar himself taking charge of the performance, and a large audience assembling to watch the result. Musical readers have learned, before now, that "King Olaf" had more than the success of esteem which so often is all that rewards new works at our festivals. On all hands the public recognised a composition out of, because above, the common order, and as such they proclaimed it, without, as far as I am aware, a dissentient voice. I must recognise and speak of it, too, in the same light, wherefore it is my intention (authority approving) to give Mr. Elgar's work a special article, with illustrative extracts, in the next number of this journal. That measure of attention and prominence "King Olaf" richly deserves. At the present moment, I shall refer to it only in general terms, indicating, first of all, that the structural plan shows more than ordinary use of representative themes, which, indeed, form the groundwork of the whole. The composer does not use them in the manner of Wagner, competition with whom is, so far, wisely avoided. Wagner, as everybody knows, varied and combined his Leitmotive in the most elaborate and ingenious way, whereas Mr. Elgar employs them in a fashion the most simple and direct. The advantage of this is that, after one hearing, a guide through the work is not needed, especially as the themes have, for the most part, sufficient individual character to render them easy of identification. The resources shown by the composer in their treatment are very striking. There is no effect of patchiness or suggestion of mechanical routine. Subjects appear, vanish, and re-appear without indication of effort, and with an impression of naturalness and ease. This is the supreme test of capacity to employ the method here exemplified, and, generally speaking, Mr. Elgar comes out of it exceedingly well. That the method is the best possible I strongly doubt, but that question does not affect the point of Mr. Elgar's power to handle it. Another conspicuous feature in this work is its dramatic force and picturesqueness. The scenes are most varied in character, no two having much in common; but Mr. Elgar easily rises to their demands, without weakness on the one hand or exaggeration on the other. I must confess to unpreparedness for such a display, although not unacquainted with the best of Mr. Elgar's earlier music. It distinctly marks the composer for work in connection with the lyric stage, where, with some modification of his method in favour of pure vocal melody, he would be likely to achieve success. As it is, we here pass from scene to scene with undiminished interest, arising from full consciousness of the fact that the significance of dramatic action and utterance is reflected, as far as that may be, in the attendant music.

Such are the most prominent and satisfactory features in "King Olaf"; the details I shall deal with as already promised. For the rest, it may suffice to say now that Mr. Elgar, who drew out the plan of the libretto, has strung the scenes together in ingenious fashion, which really establishes a sufficient, though arbitrary, connection. The declamatory music is often powerful; the choral numbers are, for the most part, striking, and one rises from a performance of the work with a sense of satisfaction not too often felt. Credit must be given to all concerned in "creating" the novelty—to Madame Henson, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies for thoroughly efficient service as soloists; to the chorus, which left but little to desire; and to the orchestra, which triumphed over many difficulties with little time for preparation. The reception of "King Olaf" was genuinely enthusiastic, the composer being applauded again and again as he returned to the platform. In the second part of this programme were the "Meistersinger" and "Genoveva" Overtures, Max Bruch's first Violin Concerto (solo by Mr. Willy Hess), and German's "Gipsy" Suite.

The final Concert gave its executants plenty of hard work, including, as it did, the "Spectre's Bride" and the Choral Symphony. These things are not for discussion now, it being more to the present purpose to congratulate Dr. Heap and his assistants upon a crowning example of well-applied effort, and to say, on the strength of it, that the North Staffordshire Festival is entitled to executive distinction in no mean degree. Miss Ella Russell and Mr. Andrew Black took part in both the works, and at the close it was felt that the gathering of 1896 might be stored in the memory among things which it is possible to recall with unalloyed pleasure.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Professor Bridge made his début as conductor of the Royal Choral Society on October 29, when the work chosen was Haydn's "Creation." Although this oratorio presented no difficulties to so fine a body of choristers, signs were not wanting that the Professor had already gained the esteem and confidence of the singers, and no fault could be found with the rendering of the familiar choruses, which were given with the greatest possible effectiveness. The soloists were Madame Albani, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Andrew Black, whose singing gave manifest satisfaction to a remarkably large audience. The orchestra were more audible than usual in the choral numbers, with the result of improvement in the balance of tone; and Mr. H. L. Balfour, now officially appointed organist of the Society, managed his huge instrument with skill and excellent judgment. A touching incident in the evening was the sympathetic singing of the late Sir J. Barnby's anthem, "As we have borne the image of the earthy," in memoriam of the deceased musician, whose bust, executed in bronze by Mr. Herbert Hampton, was placed on this occasion at the back of the conductor's seat.

It was a happy thought of Professor Bridge to celebrate the tenth year of the production, at the Leeds Festival, of Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful setting of Longfellow's poem "The Golden Legend," by asking the composer to conduct the performance of his work, on the 19th ult., at the Albert Hall. Few cantatas have taken so deep and lasting a hold on the public as this. Much of its widespread popularity may be attributed to the sympathetic nature of the story, but there can be no doubt that the interest arising from this is intensified in a forcible manner by the music, which is instinct with the essence of human feeling, and, moreover, combines dramatic significance with graceful melody in a most picturesque manner. The performance was worthy of the occasion. Sir Arthur took some of the numbers at a slightly slower tempo than usually adopted, but the lovely Evening Hymn, which had, as usual, to be repeated, was taken slightly quicker; the result in the former case being a gain in impressiveness, and in the latter an increase of earnestness of expression. It is hardly necessary to say that the highly-trained choristers followed the composer's beat with watchful care and implicit obedience, and once more showed themselves to be unsurpassable in clearness and beauty of phrasing and perception of the dramatic requirements of the music. Miss Margaret Macintyre sang, as Elsie, with great charm of voice and expression, and Miss Sarah Berry gave a highly sympathetic interpretation of the part of Ursula. Mr. Ben Davies sang with his accustomed fervour as the Prince, and Mr. Henschel declaimed the remarks of Lucifer with appropriate force and sense of grim humour. The small part of the Forester was also admirably sustained by Mr. Charles Ackerman, and the orchestra and management of the organ by Mr. Balfour were all that could be desired.

THE LAMOUREUX CONCERTS.

The most important musical event of the past month has been the series of performances at the Queen's Hall, given by M. Charles Lamoureux and his Parisian orchestra, on alternate evenings and afternoons, from the 16th to the 21st ult. As interpreters of French music, this body of instrumentalists has proved itself unsurpassable, and as exponents of music of other countries, the readings have only been deficient in those compositions in which grandeur and virility of expression are demanded in more than ordinary degree. The almost phenomenal unanimity of attack, perfect balance of tone, and accuracy of intonation have excited the greatest admiration, no less than the delicacy with which soft passages were played and the attention bestowed on small details. The symphonies selected from those of Beethoven were the "Pastoral," the "Eroica," and the Seventh in A, the most successful performance being that of the second-named. Accentuation of detail and finish could go no farther than in the rendering of this work, and the applause was so prolonged after the Scherzo that the players rose en masse and bowed their acknowledgments. It was a triumph of talent and infinite painstaking, though it cannot be said that the mighty spirit of the music spoke in its most masterful tones. The performance of Schumann's Symphony in C, at the second Concert, was of varying merit. The first Allegro was taken too fast, and a certain stiffness of phrasing detracted from the beauty of the Adagio, but the Scherzo was exquisitely played. At the first Concert was introduced to England the symphonic prelude to the second part of César Franck's sacred cantata "Rédemption," composed in 1872 and produced the following year at the Odéon, Paris. The prelude has for its programme the progress of Christianity since the Advent of the Redeemer. Only a musical giant could handle such an extensive subject with any hope of satisfactory results, and César Franck, with all his earnestness and resource, is not a giant of musical tones. Moreover, Mr. E. F. Jacques, the writer of the analytical programme books, had been given an earlier and different version to analyse than the one played, which made it more difficult to assess the value of the work at a first hearing; and thus it is possible that more intimate acquaintance may give rise to greater admiration. This composer's Symphony in D, of which the first performance in England was given at the fourth Concert, is undoubtedly a fine work. It was originally produced at the "Concerts du Conservatoire," Paris, in February, 1889, and is remarkable for loftiness of purpose and dignified expression. The first movement is in six sections, alternately in slow and quick tempo, and between the sombre theme of the former and the fiery character of the principal subject of the latter a struggle for mastery is depicted in a striking manner. A brief prelude for strings (pizzicato) and harps precedes the slow movement, in which is a section in dance rhythm, which fulfils the purpose of a Scherzo. The last number is well-conceived and vigorous in expression, and the work in its entirety is one of the best examples of modern French music. A Ballade Symphonique by M. Camille Chevillard, one of the most promising young French composers, and a son-in-law of M. Lamoureux, proved pleasing and imaginative, somewhat rhapsodical in style, and very tastefully scored. M. Chevillard also deserves to be commended for declining to be fettered by a programme and for having the courage to let his music speak for itself. The meanings of the two other novelties—"La Forêt enchantée," by M. Vincent d'Indy, and "Rhapsodie Cambodgienne," by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray—are both elaborately explained, a proceeding which is certainly necessary for the due appreciation of the music. The former, played at the second Concert, is founded upon Uhland's ballad "Harald," and the latter, first heard in this country at the fifth Concert, has for its poetic basis a native celebration of the subsidence of an annual inundation. The chief merit of these works is their orchestration. The first performance in England was given at the second Concert of an Overture called "Frithiof," by Mr. Théodore Dubois, who in May last succeeded the late Ambroise Thomas as head of the Paris Conservatoire. This composition is practically a symphonic poem, and has for its programme Tegner's "Frithiof's Saga," the greatest of this Swedish poet's works. Considerable knowledge of orchestral effect is shown in this piece, which is, moreover, well designed, the climax being worked up to with remarkable power and verve. Other noteworthy performances were those of Rimski-Korsakoff's brilliant "Caprice Espagnol" (Op. 34), Borodine's picturesque sketch "On the steppes of Central Asia," the Overture to Lalo's "Roi d'Ys," and Nos. 5 and 6 of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, orchestrated by Mr. Albert Parlow, the rapid changes of sentiment and tempo being given with a perfection of ensemble little short of marvellous. Mr. Newman has arranged for a third series of these Concerts next spring, probably in May.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

A great disappointment awaited those who were attracted to the second Concert, on October 26, by the "first performance" of a new symphonic poem, "The Golden Spinning Wheel," by Antonin Dvorák; for a piece of such length (it lasted twenty-six minutes by the clock!), containing so few striking ideas and so little of interest in the workmanship, has not been heard at a high-class orchestral concert for many a day. Those who had read beforehand the extraordinary folk-tale serving as a "poetic" basis to the piece had difficulty in believing that even the genius of a Dvorák could furnish the music descriptive or suggestive of the gruesome details with which it abounds. But that the hand which penned "The Spectre's Bride" should have lost so much of its cunning as to produce an absolutely dull and irritating work was, indeed, a bitter experience. True, the charm of Dvorák's exquisite orchestration, his easy flow of tune, his ever-welcome rhythmical swing cast their spell over the listener during the first few minutes. But these things alone do not make great or even passably enjoyable music, and as page after page of the score was played without offering a single stirring moment, delight changed to indifference and indifference to irritation, and the audience all but "declined" the work. May the result serve as a warning to a great composer against over-production! The programme was one of contrasts as well as surprises, for, opening with Wagner's superb "Faust" Overture, it contained, in the order named, Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony (the first movement of which has much in common with the Bayreuth master's overture) and Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," so that the most emotional of all Symphonies was placed in juxtaposition with the merriest, drollest of all orchestral pieces. For surely there is nothing like this "Till" in all music! Some superfine critics have objected to this masterpiece of a young composer of genius on the grounds that it is "tomfoolery." But we suppose they do not object to, but possibly enjoy Shakespeare's "tomfoolery" (as we have it in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," for instance), or Mark Twain's extravagant humour. Then why should not our art be enriched by a huge joke? Pessimism is rampant in music just now (as witness the Overture and Symphony played at this very Concert), and "a little nonsense now and then," &c. And when the composer presents his "nonsense" with such marvellous, almost uncanny command of all the resources of his art, and moreover gives us so much that is genuinely beautiful, we have reason to rejoice that there lives a young master who has the genius to conceive and the power to execute such an absolutely original and exhilarating a piece of music. As for the Symphony, and more particularly its stupendous first movement, we have nothing to add to what we said after one of the earliest performances in London (vide page 26 of our issue of January, 1895). It is overwhelming! The "Ritt der Walküren" concluded the programme, all the numbers of which were splendidly played.

The scheme on the last Concert, on the 2nd ult., comprised a Wagner selection: "Die Meistersinger" Overture, the Preludes to "Parsifal" and "Tristan"—the latter followed by the "Liebestod"—and the "Preislied" (sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd), which made up the first part; and Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Save that, as the high pitch was used, the choral portions sounded more "unreasonable" than usual, the performance of the gigantic work was a remarkably fine one—that of the instrumental movements in particular being interpreted in the most sympathetic way. The hall was crowded.

HENSCHEL CONCERTS.

We have had Richter, Lamoureux, and Colonne Concerts; then why not "Henschel" Concerts? Why not, indeed! The change in designation from "London Symphony Concerts" will be welcomed by music-lovers, for they do not love long titles, but curtail them as readily as they drop the "Mr." and "Miss" or "Madame" when speaking of their favourite artists. What they will not like is the deterioration in the performances, as shown at the opening Concert of the new season, at St. James's Hall, on the 12th ult. For with all our admiration for Mr. Henschel, his rare gifts and indomitable pluck, we are bound to state that such perfunctory playing as that of Brahms's First Symphony on the occasion under notice will no longer do. To signalise but one point, we may refer to the superb introduction to the last movement, where the famous "Magdalen chimes" passage for the horn was almost shorn of all its glowing beauty and pathos. The Concert opened with Wagner's "Meistersinger" Overture. Mr. Henschel's reading of this ever fresh and ever delightful masterpiece offers no point of engrossing interest. It is straightforward and does not succeed in presenting more than an accurate rendering of the printed score. We should greatly regret if these Concerts were to lose the position which Mr. Henschel has gained for them by many years' artistic endeavour and hard fighting against chilling indifference on the part of the public; and we therefore hope that a great improvement will be shown at the remaining Concerts. A novelty in the shape of a symphonic poem, "Richard III.," by F. Smetana, produced no impression. It is a noisy, almost blatant piece, ugly enough in places to be fairly descriptive of its subject. The composer naturally sought to obtain relief from the groping string figures and discordant passages for the brass, which we suppose represent the delectable "Hero" and his misdeeds; but the weak, sentimental theme he chose for that purpose might have been invented by the veriest tyro. A pianist new to England, Miss Adele aus der Ohe, created a highly favourable impression in Liszt's E flat Concerto. Technique and expression are happily mated in her playing; the former is brilliant enough to satisfy the most exacting demand, and her touch, phrasing, and feeling were highly artistic. She was enthusiastically received. Mrs. Henschel and Mr. Frangcon-Davies sang the beautiful duet from the last act of Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew" with much expression.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Whilst duly regardful of modern compositions of established reputation, this association does not ignore the claims of the old. That this policy is acceptable to the subscribers was proved on the 5th ult., when the "Creation" was received with marked approval. Of late years it has been the fashion in some quarters to speak disparagingly of the flowing melodies and unpretentious (although often imitative) orchestration characterising this work; but however loud the accusation of antiquity, it is certain that Haydn's genial oratorio continues to charm a large number of people, and that, for the most part, it falls as pleasantly upon the ear as ever. The Queen's Hall Choral Society, which has made so much progress in public favour since Mr. Randegger was appointed conductor, may be congratulated upon having started another season successfully. From the beginning of their task until its close the choralists maintained the efficiency noted on preceding occasions. Their tone is full and rich, the respective divisions are evenly balanced, and, although enthusiastic, they are thoroughly under control. Altogether it is a choral body to be proud of, and from which great things may be expected. The more striking choruses—such as "The heavens are telling" and "Achieved is the glorious work"—have seldom been heard to greater advantage. Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Hirwen Jones tastefully sang the soprano and tenor solos respectively; and quite as ably as usual Mr. Watkin Mills brought a fine voice, experience, and thorough fitness for his work to bear upon the descriptive bass airs and recitatives. A capital band did well under Mr. Randegger's steady beat, and Mr. Henry J. Wood rendered valuable service at the organ.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The Concert of October 24 offered as its chief personal attraction the presence of Mr. Eugene d'Albert, who had not been heard at Sydenham since 1882. For his principal solo he chose his own Concerto in E (No. 2, Op. 12), but not even his masterly playing succeeded in rendering it more than moderately interesting. Mr. d'Albert, however, was greeted with the utmost cordiality, and later on yielded to an imperative demand for an encore after his fine rendering of an Impromptu by Schubert and Liszt's Tarantella "Napoli." The band played the "Leonora" Overture (No. 3) very finely, and gave a spirited performance of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony. The vocalist was Miss Bertha Rossow, a new-comer from Australia, who essayed the jewel song from "Faust" and familiar Lieder by Rubinstein and Grieg with moderately successful results. Her voice, though of fairly agreeable quality, is of slender calibre, and there is a lack of ease and spontaneity in its production, though this may well have been due to nervousness.

The programme of the Concert of October 31 was mainly devoted to Sullivan's "Golden Legend," the only other number being an orchestral version by Herr Mottl of Schubert's Duet Fantasia in F minor. The most that can be said of Herr Mottl's transcription is that he has avoided all sensational display. For the rest this is an excellent example of "things better left undone." Sullivan's familiar cantata was performed in very meritorious fashion under Mr. Manns's direction, the soloists being Miss Ada Patterson, Mr. Henry Piercy, Madame Marian McKenzie, and Mr. Douglas Powell, the part of the Forester being taken by Mr. Gee. Apart from occasional hesitation, the chorus sang very creditably.

At the Concert of the 7th ult. Mdlle. Chaminade appeared in the triple capacity of composer, soloist, and accompanist. Her Concertstück, already heard at one of the Philharmonic Concerts last season, is a trivial composition, for all its pretentious sonority; but the orchestral suite "Callirrhöe" has a good deal of melodic charm, and is daintily orchestrated throughout. Several of Mdlle. Chaminade's songs were sung in incomparable style by Mdlle Landi, who was also heard to great advantage in a noble aria from Gluck's "Paride ed Elena." Mr. Manns secured very fine performances of the Overtures to "Don Giovanni" and "Oberon," and of Beethoven's Symphony in B flat (No. 4).

It was certainly unlucky that M. Vincent d'Indy's symphonic poem "La Forêt enchantée" should have been set down for performance at the Concert of the 14th ult., thus forestalling its production by M. Lamoureux by only two days. For even if this coincidence was purely due to chance, a conductor never gets the credit for innocence. As for the music itself, which dates from the year 1878, it cannot be said to afford incontestable evidence of M. d'Indy's capacity to emerge from the phase of clever discipleship. It is, however, ingeniously written and, of course, picturesquely scored. M. Nachèz introduced to the Crystal Palace audience Mr. Cliffe's new and carefully constructed Violin Concerto, and both the work and its interpreter met with a very favourable reception. We are not inclined to think, however, that this elaborate and thoughtful work is calculated to enhance the reputation earned for its composer by his two Symphonies—notably the first. The band was heard to great advantage in Schubert's immortal "Unfinished" Symphony and Goldmark's "Sakuntala" Overture, while Mr. Andrew Black gave a vigorous and incisive rendering of Wotan's "Abschied" and Mr. Henschel's ballad "Jung Dieterich."

On the 22nd ult. Berlioz's "Faust" was given in the presence of an audience of very fair dimensions, considering the rival attractions of the Lamoureux and Patti Concerts. The chief feature of the performance was the fine playing of the orchestra, the Hungarian March being encored, while the solos were efficiently given by Madame Clara Samuell, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The choir hardly rose above a level of efficiency, but Mr. Manns conducted with all his wonted fire and intelligence.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

Contrary to his usual custom, Mr. Arthur Chappell issued a prospectus of the thirty-ninth season of these valuable performances, announcing several novelties that should prove interesting. Of these we shall have to speak in future notices, for the opening performances were of the old familiar type. The series commenced on Lord Mayor's night, the 9th ult.; but, at any rate, the stalls in St. James's Hall were well occupied. Madame Soldat, a former pupil of Mr. Joachim, and whose style reflects at a respectful distance that of her illustrious preceptor, was the leader in Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74) and in Schumann's late and not altogether satisfactory Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 110). Mr. Leonard Borwick, the pianist at this Concert, played with the utmost conscientiousness Chopin's characteristic, though not in all respects satisfactory Sonata in B minor. Madame Blanche Marchesi, whose vocal method is far superior to her voice, gained effect in airs by Handel, Spontini, Benjamin Godard, and Schumann.

At the first of the Saturday Concerts this season, on the 14th ult., Mr. Eugene d'Albert was heard at his best in his rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op. 57), which was remarkable for energy, technical finish, and artistic appreciation of the work. There was a crowded audience, and the encore, peremptorily demanded, was the second movement of the Bonn master's earlier Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3). The concerted works were Mozart's delightful Quartet in D minor, erroneously known as No. 2, and Brahms's splendid Pianoforte Quintet in F minor (Op. 34). Madame Blanche Marchesi was again the vocalist, and gained great admiration by her very fine rendering of songs by Handel, Schubert, Brahms, and Paladilhe.

Concerning the programme of Monday, the 16th ult., there is little to be said. Madame Soldat was, for the third time, the leading violinist, and the concerted works were Cherubini's symmetrical, if somewhat cold Quartet in D minor (No. 3), and Arensky's clever and effective Pianoforte Trio in the same key. The lovers of Schumann's music, and happily now their name is legion, were delighted with Mr. Leonard Borwick's performance of the Sonata in G minor (Op. 22) by that composer, of whose works he is scarcely rivalled as an exponent. Mr. Watkin Mills, in unfamiliar airs by Battishill and Massenet, may be congratulated on the selection of the vocal numbers and their interpretation.

The last Concert that can be noticed this month is that of the following Saturday, the 21st ult., which commenced with Brahms's masterpiece, the Clarinet Quintet in B minor (Op. 115), the executants being Mr. Clinton in the clarinet part and Madame Soldat, Messrs Ries, Gibson, and Ludwig in those for strings. Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) was played with delightful purity of touch and intelligence by Miss Clotilde Kleeberg, and the remaining instrumental piece was Mendelssohn's early but still admired Pianoforte Quartet in B minor (Op. 3, No. 3). Mr. Kennerley Rumford, in spite of hoarseness, rendered four songs by high-class composers entirely to the satisfaction of the audience.

QUEEN'S HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The artistic interest and merit of the Saturday evening Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall have been fully sustained as the weeks have gone by. The programmes are models of comprehensive attractiveness. The selections embrace all schools and contain something to please all tastes. Much interest is imparted to them by novelties to English audiences. On October 24 was introduced Lalo's Orchestral Suite from "Namouna," a ballet produced at the Paris Opéra House in 1882. The Suite consists of a Prelude, Serenade, Théme varié, "Parades de Foire," and "Fête Foraine," and the music is worthy of the composer of "Le Roi d'Ys." At the same Concert, Cowen's "Four old English Dances" were played and most enthusiastically received. The following week Grieg's second "Peer Gynt" Suite and Beethoven's "Ritter Ballet" music attracted many musicians. The latter was composed for Count Waldstein in 1791, and was "a kind of masked ball in antique style." It consists of eight numbers, a March, German, Hunting, Love, Battle, and Drinking songs, Waltz, and Coda. The score has no parts for flutes, oboes, or bassoons, and the title of each number is justified in an obvious manner by the style of the music. On the 7th ult. were performed a Sinfonietta in E (Op. 55), by Ferdinand Thieriot, and Nos. 17 to 21 of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, orchestrated by Dvorák. The Sinfonietta, a pleasing and graceful work, was written in 1876, and shows the influence of Mendelssohn. The orchestral version of the famous dances is written with masterly command of instrumentation, and intensifies the characteristics of the measures in a striking manner. At the Concerts on the 14th and 21st ult. were given respectively the first performances of Dvorák's symphonic poems "Der Wassermann" ("The Water-Sprite") and "Die Mittagshexe" ("The Noon Witch"), these being the two latter of three like works, the first of which, "Das Goldene Spinnrad" ("The Golden Spinning Wheel"), was produced at the Richter Concert, on October 26 last. "The Water-Sprite," in common with its companions, is programme-music of a very pronounced kind, and must be judged accordingly. The legend which it illustrates, although gruesome, has much that lends itself to musical expression, and such portions have been dealt with by Dvorák in a most picturesque and ingenious manner. The theme of the elfish sprite lacks the suggestiveness of malignity which is expected, but it possesses the necessary distinctiveness, and its exuberant gleefulness is decidedly fascinating. Some passages in the development approach perilously near the grotesque, an unavoidable consequence when composers set themselves to illustrate scenes beyond the limits of their art. The "Noon Witch" has a repulsive story, the choice of which shows regrettable want of appreciation of fit material for musical treatment. Dvorák is a master of orchestration, but when he seeks to depict the strangulations of a baby he abuses his abilities and degrades his art.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

The Orchestral Concerts conducted by Mr. Randegger on Sunday afternoons, at the Queen's Hall, have been distinguished by most meritorious programmes and performances. Amongst the works given have been Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and "Egmont" Overture, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, the Overture and Introduction to the third Act of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Mozart's Overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro," Edward German's "Gipsy" Suite, and the first performance in London of the sacred dance from Signor Mancinelli's new opera "Hero and Leander," produced at the recent Norwich Festival. The clever young violinist, Mr. Percy Frostick, was the soloist in the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto, on the 1st ult.; Señor Arbos was heard in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, on the 8th ult.; and Herr Ludwig Lebell, a talented violoncellist, made a successful début in London on the 15th ult., in pieces by Popper and Davidoff. M. Hollman has also appeared, and the vocalists have been Madame Belle Cole, Madame Fanny Moody, Mr. Herbert Grover, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Signor Foli.

The newly-established Chamber Concerts in the Queen's (Small) Hall on Sunday evenings have been well attended. Since the initial performance many chamber works by old and modern masters have been given with commendable attention to finish, and other instrumentalists who have appeared have been Miss Dora Bright, Miss Ethel Sharp, Miss Katie Goodson, Señor Manuel Gomez, and Mr. E. Tomlinson. The attractiveness of the evenings have been further increased by the engagement of Mesdames Emily Squire, Helen Trust, Marie Duma, Belle Cole, and Lucille Hill, whose pianoforte accompaniments were sympathetically played by Mr. Henry J. Wood.

The Sunday League Choir and Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Churchill Sibley, have filled the Queen's Hall on each Sunday evening, and have given performances of "The Golden Legend," "Elijah," "The Messiah," "Judas Maccabæus," and, on the 22nd ult., Barnby's "Rebekah" and Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal." The performance of the last-named was of special interest, as the work had not previously been given in Queen's Hall, and indeed, had not been heard in the West of London for six years. The vocal solos were rendered by Madame Medora Henson, Miss Pettican, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Douglas Powell, and the recitation portion was dramatically delivered by Mr. Charles Fry, whose efforts were most warmly applauded.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND CONCERT.

It speaks volumes for the efficiency this force has acquired under the watchful conductorship of Cavaliere L. Zavertal that, at the Concert at Queen's Hall, on the 20th ult., one of the most satisfactory performances was that of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. All the brightness and piquancy of this notable example of the master's lighter mood were as clearly yet delicately brought out as could have been wished by the most exacting listener. The lovely Allegretto scherzando, as great a favourite—if not absolutely the greatest—as any of its kind extant, was in particular given with a crispness and refinement that very few worshippers of Beethoven's genius have heard surpassed. A special word of mention is also due for the rendering of the sparkling concluding Allegro. Regarded in its entirety, such a performance would have done credit to any instrumental association basing its claim to public favour on the execution of symphonies. In a wholly different direction conspicuous success was also gained in the Prelude to "Lohengrin." Not the slightest shade of expression was ignored by the conductor, and his wishes were so ably carried out by the band that the audience asked for a repetition, but in vain. Cowen's tasteful and characteristic Stately Dance and Rustic Dance, from his "English Dances in the Olden Style," the Minuetto from the first of Bizet's "L'Arlésienne" Suites, the air familiarly termed Handel's "Largo," Saint-Saëns's stirring "Marche Militaire Française," and the Prelude to Goldmark's opera "The Cricket on the Hearth" were included in the excellent Concert conducted by Cavaliere Zavertal throughout with decision and consummate tact.

SARASATE CONCERTS.

Mr. Sarasate does not give Concerts in London every autumn, but he honoured the metropolis with a visit this season, and he was well rewarded, for the attendances at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoons, the 2nd and 9th ult., were very large. Since the marriage of Miss Berthe Marx, the Spanish violinist has associated himself with Dr. Otto Neitzel, a competent, though by no means a phenomenal pianist. The two artists were heard together in Schubert's familiar Rondo Brillant in B minor and in Raff's somewhat unsatisfactorily constructed, though melodious Duet Sonata in E minor (Op. 73). Mr. Sarasate's solos were four of the Slavonic Dances by Dvorák and his own "Airs Ecossais," with, of course, the usual complement of encores. The solos set down for Dr. Neitzel were Chopin's Ballades in A flat (No. 3) and F minor (No. 4).

The scheme of the second Concert included Brahms's beautiful Sonata in G (Op. 78) and Goldmark's Suite (No. 2), both for pianoforte and violin. The latter work is not equal to the more familiar Suite in E, but it decidedly improves on acquaintance. Of the minor solos given by both executants it is unnecessary to speak, and of the third Concert, on the 30th ult., notice must of course be reserved until next month.

MESSRS. WALENN'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Distinction was given, on the 17th ult., to the second of Messrs. Walenn's excellent Chamber Concerts by the first performance in London of a Pianoforte Trio in G minor (Op. 15) by F. Smetana. This is a work of both power and charm. It is in three movements, all of which are based upon expressive themes, and are developed with Bohemian nationality of idiom and genuine Slavonic alternations of fiery impetuosity and languorous sentiment. It is surprising that so attractive a work should not have been brought to the Metropolis before; but now that its merits have been publicly tested, perhaps Mr. Chappell will, in the course of a season or two, introduce it at his "popular" Concerts. The spirit of the work was well caught by the executants, who were Miss Maude Rihll, Mr. Gerald Walenn, and Mr. Herbert Walenn, although some passages were roughly played. The programme also contained an admirable selection of less important instrumental pieces, which were pleasantly diversified by songs, tastefully rendered by Mr. Arthur Walenn.

CHAMBER CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

The greatest of living violinists, Mr. Joachim, takes many pupils, and one of them is Mr. Henry Such, who gave the first of three Recitals at St. James's Hall, on October 24, just too late for notice last month. His manner forcibly reminded listeners of his esteemed preceptor, particularly in Bach's Chaconne, which was his principal solo. Bach was again represented at the second Recital, on the 13th ult., Mr. Such being associated with Miss Fanny Davies in one of Bach's pianoforte and violin sonatas, of which a masterly performance was given.

The Song and Pianoforte Recital given by Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick at St. James's Hall, on October 30, was very interesting, especially, perhaps, to lovers of antiquarian music. We had four old German sacred songs by Johann Schulz, C. D. Schubart, a traditional air of the fourteenth century, "Joseph, lieber Joseph meine," and another, "Ein fröhlich Gesang." Some of the old Irish airs, edited by Professor Villiers Stanford, and pieces by Schubert, Schumann, and Grieg were also sung by Mr. Plunket Greene. Mr. Leonard Borwick's pianoforte solos included minor pieces by Nawratil, Brahms, and Tschaïkowsky, and Chopin's Fantasia in F minor. It is almost needless to say that all that was done was well done by both artists, and that there was a very large audience.

The Concerts of British chamber music, worthy of more support than they receive, undertaken by Mr. Ernest Fowles, may still be numbered among existing musical enterprises, and the first of the present series, given in the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 4th ult., was artistically very successful. The programme included Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat and Professor Villiers Stanford's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in D. The artists were Mr. Gompertz, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Cecilia Gates, Mr. Paul Ludwig, and Mr. Arthur Oswald.

Among the innumerable Chamber Concerts that were given last month may be mentioned that of Mr. Frederik Frederiksen at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on Friday, the 20th ult., the event unfortunately clashing with a Lamoureux performance in the large hall on the same evening. But record should be made of a meritorious Suite in G minor for pianoforte and violoncello by the Scandinavian composer, Johan Halvorsen, in which he was assisted by Miss Lucie Hillier at the pianoforte. The able violoncellist also played solos by Mr. Sauret and Mr. Saint-Saëns, and Mr. William Nicholl and Miss Clara Williams rendered vocal pieces with acceptance. This was Mr. Frederiksen's fifth annual Concert in London.

The Pianoforte Recitals given by Miss Johanna Heymann, at St. James's Hall, on October 29 and the 10th and 20th ult., were well attended, as much was rumoured in advance concerning the merits of this young lady as an executant. Whether expectations were fully realised it would be difficult to say, but at any rate Miss Heymann has much flexibility, and plays with expression, though at times her touch sounded rather hard. To speak in detail concerning her three programmes is wholly unnecessary, but it should be recorded that besides playing generally admired works by Beethoven, Bach, Schubert, Chopin, Schumann, and Grieg, Miss Heymann introduced several new, or, at any rate, unfamiliar pieces. Among the most interesting were "Aus dem Julklapp," by J. Rontgen; "Elfenspiel" and "Fantasiestück," by Carl Heymann; a charming Valse Arabesque," by J. H. Lack; and "Aus den Zwiegesprächen," by Amanda Rontgen. Miss Heymann undoubtedly created a favourable impression, and probably she feels sufficient encouragement to renew her visit at some future time.

The sixth series of Mr. Richard Gompertz's String Quartet Concerts began on the 11th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The occasion was rendered interesting by the first performance of a new String Quartet in D minor by Professor Villiers Stanford (Op. 64). That the work is worthy of the distinguished composer may be said without hesitation—that is, as regards musicianship, earnestness, expression, and occasional suggestions of Irish character. Beyond that it would be unsafe to go until the Quartet has been heard a second time. The executants were Messrs.

Gompertz, Haydn Inwards, Emil Kreuz, and Charles Ould. Beethoven's late Quartet in E flat (Op. 127) was likewise well performed, and Mrs. Henschel contributed songs by Messrs. Henschel, Sgambati, and Davidoff.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Miss Katie Goodson, who gave her first Recital in London, at St. James's Hall, on the 3rd ult., is one of the most promising young pianists who have been heard in London for some time past. Miss Goodson is a pupil of Leschetizky, under whose tuition she has acquired a brilliant technique combined with a powerful and sympathetic touch. The most important work on her programme was Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses," and these were played with remarkable exuberance and verve. A new work by Edouard Schütt, consisting of a Prelude, Nocturnette, and Sérénade d'Arlequin (Op. 48), was performed on this occasion for the first time in London. These pieces, however, proved of little musical interest, although full justice was done to them by their interpreter. Other pieces by Chopin, Leschetizky, Moszkowski, and Paderewski were rendered with a command of expression and facility of execution that more than once elicited enthusiastic applause from the audience, and necessitated her playing an extra piece at the close of her programme.

Mr. Eugene d'Albert's programme at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on the 3rd ult., included widely differing schools of composition. Beethoven was represented by the "Waldstein" Sonata and Schumann by the Fantasie in C, each played with the intellectual force and perception of effect always characterising Mr. d'Albert's reading of these masters. Another performance remarkable for finish and accurate reproduction of underlying poetic sentiment was that of Chopin's Ballade in A flat, and from the same composer the accomplished artist selected the two extra pieces he was called upon to play. The examples of Liszt were less fortuitously chosen, though they served to show Mr. d'Albert's exceptional brilliancy and power.

Mr. d'Albert was not heard at his best at his Recital on the 7th ult., at St. James's Hall. The interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) was masterly in point of execution, but as a reading it did not attain the high standard expected from so celebrated an artist. The rendering of Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses" (Op. 54), although of great brilliancy, was lacking in the finish and grace which the music requires. The most successful performance of the afternoon was that of a Suite in D minor, written, we are informed, by the pianist when he was a pupil at the National Training School—now the Royal College of Music. This work consists of an Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Gavotte, Musette, and Gigue, which, as indicated by their titles, are written in the style of the old masters. The work is decidedly clever and pleasing, especially the Gavotte, and the Gigue afforded opportunity for the legitimate display of the composer's great executive powers. Chopin's Scherzo in B minor (Op. 20) was also finely played, and other pieces by Rubinstein and Tausig were rendered in a virtuoso-like manner.

MR. CHARLES JACOBY'S RECITALS.

Mr. Charles Jacoby, a former violin pupil of the Royal College of Music, gave two Recitals at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on October 27 and the 5th ult., before large and highly appreciative audiences. His programme ranged from Bach, Beethoven, and Schubert to Wieniawski, Sarasate, and Stanford; and both by his selections from these composers and his interpretation of their various works, he proved himself a genuine artist who takes his art very seriously and as an executant of no mean power. He deserves the thanks of music-lovers, and especially of those having the future of English music at heart, for the production of a new Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in D minor by Mr. H. Walford Davies, another erstwhile pupil of the Royal College, and one of the most earnest and talented of our young composers. The new work is not merely the best which Mr. Davies has so far brought to a hearing, but a notable achievement which deserves recognition wherever res severa verum gaudium is still the motto of musicians. There is nobility, pathos, and elevation in the opening Allegro; the grand first subject sweeps along with rare breadth and dignity, and the composer has succeeded in maintaining almost throughout the whole work the high level thus reached at the very outset. Mr. Davies's workmanship has always been of a high order, and the new Sonata excels in that respect. But what we prize much more is the great advance he has made as a melodist. This, more than anything else, should justify our looking upon him as one who will ere long "arrive" and produce enduring work. At present he is still under the influence of Brahms, though, in spite of his youth, he has not fallen into the error of emulating that master's over-elaboration and consequent occasional diffuseness as sometimes displayed in his early works. The movements are, in fact, concise and easy to follow, if we except the Andantino, which is so original in design and so sombre, not to say pessimistic in expression, that it is difficult to grasp at a first hearing. In the Allegretto semplice he has dared to be unaffectedly tuneful, and a delightful piece of music is the result. The Finale is a vigorous, melodious, and exultant movement, which worthily crowns a work in which noble endeavour is shown in every bar and the "lion's claw" of something very like genius in its finest moments. It was beautifully played by Mr. Jacoby and the composer.

MUSICAL GUILD.

Beethoven's String Quartet in F (Op. 59) opened the new season of this Society's Chamber Concerts, at Kensington Town Hall, on October 27. Messrs. Arthur Bent, Wallace Sutcliffe, Alfred Hobday, and Paul Ludwig were the interpreters, and secured what was on the whole a good performance. A new Suite in A major for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. T. T. Noble, was played by Mr. Bent and the composer, but failed to create any deep impression. The best movement is a Romance, in which an engaging theme is effectively treated. But the opening Prelude and succeeding Adagio are neither remarkable for thematic material nor workmanship, and the final Moto perpetuo borders on the commonplace. Mr. Noble will have to try again, and exercise, above all, the virtue of self-criticism. A refined and finished performance of Brahms's beautiful Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26) was given by Miss Ethel Sharpe, Miss Isabella Donkersley, Messrs. Hobday and Paul Ludwig; and Miss Helen Buckley's resonant and well-trained soprano voice was heard to great advantage in Massenet's Air "Pleurez mes yeux," from "Le Cid," and some songs.

At the second Concert Miss Winifred Holiday and Miss Maggie Moore played Robert Kahn's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in G minor (Op. 5), a very "respectable" but very uninteresting work, which creates no violent desire to hear another note by this composer. Three of Brahms's choruses for female voices with accompaniments for harp and two horns (Op. 17) were sung by the Ladies' Choir of the Royal College of Music, but the tempi were taken so very slowly, and there was such an air of languor and listlessness about the whole performance, that the beautiful pieces came dangerously near sounding as dreary as Herr Kahn's Sonata. That excellent fiddler, Miss Jessie Grimson, played the Romance from Joachim's Hungarian Concerto and two Slavonic Dances by Dvorák, which last-named delightful pieces, splendidly played, were the only bright spots in an exceptionally dull Concert. Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in C (Op. 3) completed the programme and was played by Miss Moore, Miss Holiday, and Mr. Werge.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

A programme containing the names of Rossini, Lalo, Verdi, Tschaïkowsky, and Wagner could hardly be excelled for variety and catholicity of taste. Such a programme was that of the Orchestral Concert given by the students on the 3rd ult., which opened with the Overture to "William Tell," followed by Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" for violin and orchestra (Op. 21), Ford's scene "Am I awake or do I dream?" from Act II. of Verdi's "Falstaff," Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, and Wagner's "Meistersinger" Prelude. A tremendous task for a body of students! Yet the performances were not merely creditable to the young players; some of them, at any rate, could be thoroughly enjoyed even by the severely critical. The overture, in which the solo passages for the wood-wind and violoncello were capitally played, went with immense spirit, and in Lalo's piece Miss Marie Motto once more proved herself a violinist of great ability and still greater promise. Mr. Emlyn Davies's resonant voice and dramatic style were well suited in the extraordinarily ingenious and vigorous scene from Verdi's comic masterpiece. The performance of the Symphony was not equal to those given at Alexandra House and the Imperial Institute a year or so ago. Professor Stanford hurried the tempi of the first three movements, so that at times his orchestra could hardly follow and a want of clearness and refinement was the result. From an emotional point of view, also, the playing of the first and last movements left much to be desired, and in this respect the contrast with the earlier performances, under the same conductor, was very marked. The glorious "Meistersinger" Prelude, perhaps the only piece of music which can be played even after Tschaïkowsky's heart-rending Swan's song without losing a particle of its bracing effectiveness, was splendidly given, and Professor Stanford's reading presented points of much interest.

At the Chamber Concert, on the 11th ult., Mr. William Hurlstone played three very clever pianoforte pieces of his composition—a Romance, a Capriccio, and a Scherzo. They are as little remarkable for melody as pupils' efforts generally are, but they show hardly any traces of immaturity in other respects, being well laid out, effectively written for the instrument, and full of sound musicianship. The concerted pieces were Tschaïkowsky's String Quartet in D (Op. 11), played by Miss Otie Chew, Samuel Grimson, Edward Behr, and Robert Grimson; and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), in which Miss Rosina Cerasoli and Miss Marie Motto took the pianoforte and violin parts respectively. Enjoyable performances, which told of careful rehearsing, were given of both works. Miss Henrietta Smith and Mr. James McInnes sang a duet from Donizetti's "Don Pasquale," and Miss Florence Buckley two airs from Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater."

Preliminary Examinations for twelve Free Open Scholarships at the Royal College of Music will be held on February 3, in various local centres throughout the United Kingdom. The Scholarships will be allotted as follows:—Composition two, Singing four, Pianoforte one, Organ one, Violin one, Viola or Double Bass one, Violoncello one, Oboe or Bassoon one. The Scholarships are open to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects within the stated ages. They are each of the approximate value of £40 a year, and entitle the holders to systematic free education in music, and are, as a rule, tenable for three years. In some special cases maintenance grants are added.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A programme of unusual excellence was offered at the Chamber Concert of the Royal Academy of Music, on the 16th ult., at St. James's Hall, and the performances were generally above the average in merit. Perhaps the most interesting piece was Bemberg's "La Ballade du Désespéré" for voice and declamation, beautifully rendered by Miss Gertrude Bevan and Miss Ellen M. Bowick, with the accompaniments well played by the Misses Edith Byford, May H. Mukle, and Mabel E. Colyer. Other numbers in the programme worthy of mention, as being contributions by promising students, were an Andante and Rondo for violin and pianoforte by Mr. William H. Reed; two very pleasing songs, "Summer" and "A May Madrigal," by Miss Elsie E. Horne; three dances, arranged for pianoforte and strings by Mr. Joseph C. Holbrook; and two choral pieces, "Winged love's a rover" and "Sorrow can laugh and Fury sing," by Mr. H. Claiborne Dixon. Sir Alexander Mackenzie may be heartily congratulated on the success of this Concert.

During the last month an interesting and instructive series of Lectures have been given at the Royal Academy of Music, by Mr. F. Corder, on Wagner's music-dramas, a considerable portion of which have been sung by the students of the Institution.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The continued progress of this Institution, both in the number and the efficiency of its members, was manifested at the Guildhall, on October 31, at the annual presentation of medals, prizes, and certificates by the Lady Mayoress. Mr. W. H. Cummings, the new Principal of the School, in the course of an address said there were now no less than 3,700 students on the roll, and one of the difficulties with which the council had to cope was the increasing demand upon the establishment. The action of the Corporation had created the largest musical academy in the world, so that the English people could no longer be reproached with failure to appreciate music. As Principal, his desire was to follow in the footsteps of the late Sir Joseph Barnby, whose devotion to the Institution had been so marked.

The Misses Emily C. Dixon and Beatrice Shaw (Associates) respectively took gold and silver medals as pianists. The Lord Mayor's Prize (for soprano vocalists) went to Miss Mable Englehardt; the Sheriff's Prize (given by Mr. Sheriff Cooper), for contralto vocalists, was divided between Miss Maude Clough and Mrs. Hyem; the Jenkinson Prize (for pianoforte students) was taken by Miss Rachel Ricardo; the Chairman's Prize (for organ students) by Mr. Walter A. Richards; the Hill Prize (for the most deserving violin student) by Miss Bertha Murray; and the Libotton Memorial Prize (for violoncello students) by Hans Dressel. After the numerous other awards, the late Lord Mayor (Sir Walter H. Wilkin), referring to the prosperity of the School, said the wishes of the Corporation when founding it in 1880 had been fully realised. During the preparatory Concert by students Mr. Tom Powley (a prize-taker) gave a spirited rendering of Mendelssohn's air "I'm a roamer." The choir sang with much delicacy Barnby's beautiful part-song "Sweet and low" (the audience standing in respect for the memory of the composer), and also introduced a brisk national part-song, entitled "Victoria," by Mr. Cummings.

GRESHAM LECTURES.

The fine hall of the City of London School not being available, Professor Bridge had to return temporarily to the limited accommodation at Gresham College for his series of Music Lectures, delivered from the 10th to the 13th ult. On the first-named day the Professor took for his subject the estimable old master, Matthew Lock, who, the Professor said, was trained under Edward Gibbons, brother of the famous Orlando Gibbons. He wrote the first book we know of giving rules for figured bass, which was published in 1673, and his music showed him to be well abreast with the art of his time. He composed some of the earliest English dramatic music, notably to Shadwell's "Psyche," which was published in 1675, but was written two years previously. From examination of this music the Professor thought Lock quite capable of having written the "Macbeth" music, which some antiquaries were inclined to attribute to Purcell.

The illustrations at this Lecture included the "Invocation" from "Psyche" and several other numbers by Matthew Lock, which were excellently rendered by Miss Monk and Messrs. Oakley, Fell, and C. Ackerman.

At the second Lecture the Professor for the first time discoursed upon the origin and development of the oratorio. This form of art he traced to the old Mysteries and Moralities which were popular in Europe in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and especially in England. A good example of these plays, which were sometimes given in churches, was one entitled "Noah's Flood," played in the fourteenth century at Chester. In this occurred a song for Noah's Wife, who, when all was prepared, delayed entering the Ark to have a parting glass with a friend, and who lingered so long that Noah grew alarmed, and sent his sons to seek her. They had to bring her by main force, and as soon as she arrived on board she gave Noah a sound box on the ear. In a Coventry Mystery occurred a "Shepherd's Song" and a "Lullaby" to the Infant Saviour, the first being in madrigal style. Abuses gradually crept into these mystery plays, which caused them to lose favour with ecclesiastics; but some saw good in them, and chief of these was St. Philip Neri. He preceded and followed his sermons by musical settings in dramatic form of sacred incidents—drama sacra per musica. These performances, taking place in the oratory of his church, gave us the word oratorio. Much impetus was given to the development of this form by Palestrina's immediate predecessor as master of the Papal Choir, Animuccia, a musician whose fame had been eclipsed by the renown of his successor. It was remarkable that the year 1600 saw the first public performances of true opera and oratorio, the former being by Peri and the latter, called a Morality and entitled "l'Anima e Corpo," being composed by Cavalière. This work showed great advance, and the stage directions were precise and elaborate. Another step was taken by Mazzochi, the musician who invented the signs for crescendo and diminuendo; but to Carissimi belonged the glory of establishing the grand form of oratorio.

Much interest was attached to the musical illustrations at this Lecture, which were sung by the same company that assisted on the previous evening, and included the "Shepherd's Song" and "Lullaby," referred to in the discourse, and excerpts from the music of Animuccia, Cavalière, Mazzochi, and Carissimi.

The two concluding Lectures were devoted to Schubert, the centenary of whose birth will occur next January. Schubert's songs having already been considered, attention on this occasion was confined to his music written for the stage. His achievements in this branch of musical art could not be regarded as much more than experiments, but as Schubert's experiments they could not be otherwise than interesting, and they moreover contain many a gem and lovely musical thought. They extended from the time when he was seventeen until his death, and were most varied in style. Little discrimination was shown in the choice of libretti, and much delightful music was wasted on puerile words. His essays in opera were many, and in spite of continued disappointment he remained undaunted till the end. The list of his early operas comprised eighteen, none of which were published, and some of which had been lost. In 1817 he came under the influence of Rossini, and from that period were dated his overtures in Italian style. In 1822 he produced "Alfonso and Estrella," which was revived with success in 1881, at Carlsruhe. The best known of his dramatic music was that to the drama entitled "Rosamunde, Princess of Cyprus." The libretto had been lost, which, however, was probably not a matter for regret.

The final evening was principally occupied by the Recital of a complete Singspiel, entitled "Die Zwillingsbrüder" ("The Twins"), written in 1819 and produced the following year, when it ran for six nights. The overture showed the influence of Rossini, but several of the vocal solos were genuinely Schubertian. Amongst the best of the latter were a soprano song, "I know I am a child no more," a lyric in praise of country life, and a vigorous sailors' ditty. Much dramatic instinct was shown in a quartet, and the inevitable duets for the lovers were expressive.

The executants of the first of the Schubert Lectures were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Laura Pearson, Mr. Avalon Collard, and Mr. Daniel Price, this company, with the exception of Miss Pearson, taking part with Mr. C. Ackerman and the choristers of Westminster Abbey in the recitation of the opera, which was given under the direction of Mr. J. E. Borland, who had provided an admirable English translation of the libretto.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

THE monthly meetings of the Musical Association were resumed, at the Royal College of Organists, on the 10th ult., when Dr. McNaught was voted to the chair, and Dr. F. J. Sawyer read a paper with the provocative title of "Why do we teach harmony so badly?" Dr. Sawyer, however, preceded his discourse by a declaration that he had no intention of casting a slight on teachers of harmony, but had adopted the somewhat startling title in order to call lively attention to a new method of instruction which avoided what he considered to be serious defects in popular text-books. Although Dr. Sawyer thus neatly allayed any possible feeling of hostility, it became evident, as he developed his subject, that there was considerable justification for the charges preferred against modern text-books. Dr. Sawyer said that instead of furthering that which was the essence of music—viz., the development of a true artistic temperament by giving the student power to manipulate the means placed in his hands—the text-books simply made the rudiments of his art more or less—and indeed more than less—a mechanical and uninteresting drudgery of no more art value than an addition sum. The subject of harmony should be approached not as dull mathematics, but as living music. The object of harmony was to give the student power to manipulate chords, to obtain a practical skill that either when creating music on paper or when extemporising at his instrument he might so use these chords that they should produce a true art work agreeable to the ear. Until the student could do this he had not attained the object of his study. It was the entire ignoring of the creative side of harmony that had tended to degrade and render distasteful this beautiful aspect of the art. In our text-books of the last fifty years—viz., Goss, Richter, Stainer, Macfarren, and Prout—there was practically but one way of teaching the student how to manipulate chords—viz., by giving him a figured bass—that was to say, he never had to exercise his judgment as to the chord he was to employ. Just as the infant opened its mouth and swallowed the spoonful of pap held to its lips, so the musical student complacently swallowed the fraction of musical truth, and in a more or less infantile way put above the figured bass the chord that its harmony-mother had given it. Professor Prout's work excited the highest esteem, but of all books by which the student could be taught to use chords, this was the very worst, for he was not allowed to use one single chord himself: they were all selected for him. In Mr. Banister's comprehensive book more attempt was made to explain chord progression, although all the exercises in use, while the student was learning his chords, were figured basses. This method of teaching harmony by figured basses was bad, inasmuch as the student never had to consider that most important particular—the progression of his bass. What would be thought of a system of carpentering that only showed the use of tools and never let the pupil handle or use those tools himself? Again, how gruesomely ugly most exercises in harmony were! All exercises should be little examples of art, and all framed to lead to true artistic development. They should be real music. Dr. Sawyer concluded his paper by a brief description of the method which the student really required, and said that from the moment that the tonic and dominant triads had been explained the pupil should be taught to use those chords himself. For this purpose a threefold form of exercise was recommended—viz., (1) bass and treble given, (2) bass only given, (3) melody given. A fourth form, declared to be the most important of all, was to "give him nothing, but tell him, after explaining the construction of short phrases, to write a passage on the tonic and dominant harmonies." The next chord to be taken would be the subdominant, and after the primary triads would follow the secondary triads on the supertonic, mediant, and submediant, and diminished triad on the leading note. When any special chord was introduced the pupil should be told to "introduce and follow this chord in various ways." Let the melodies chosen be selected from old standard songs, or from the slow movement of lesser known classic compositions. "In short, in everything give the student an artistic and musical aim in his work." To the average pianoforte pupil there were two things—études and music; and to the harmony pupil there were also two things—harmony and music. We taught harmony badly because we had taken a low view of its aims, and because we had not given it a thought that our present plan might be improved upon. It was the neglect of the creative side of student work that had been so greatly overlooked, and which must be cultivated that the pupil might learn that harmony was art, and that chord making must result in music.

The discussion which followed was one of the longest that has taken place at the meetings of the Association, and amongst those taking part were Drs. McNaught, Maclean, Greenish, and Campbell, and Messrs. Barri, Southgate, and Banister. The last-named spoke at some length, but the substance of what was said may be gathered from Dr. Sawyer's reply, which may be epitomised as follows: That the contention that there were text-books which gave some attention to chord progression and the harmonisation of melodies did not alter the fact that these important particulars were slighted in the popular books by Goss, Richter, Stainer, Macfarren, and Prout. That the admission made by most of the speakers that they did not follow the text-books but interpolated exercises, and in teaching practically adopted the method advocated in the paper, proved that the text-books were deficient. That the fact that most faults occurred in examination papers in the harmonisation of given melodies, also showed that the teaching was not good. That if our average teachers were unsatisfactory it was because our text-books were faulty. That the pupil who could use chords freely would be perfectly able to analyse harmonic progressions.

CHELTENHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The fourth triennial Musical Festival at Cheltenham took place on the 3rd, 4th, and 5th ult., in the Assembly Rooms of the bright and attractive town. Owing to the recent epidemic at Gloucester, and its effect upon adjacent places, the question of celebrating the Festival this year was in suspense until the summer had considerably advanced, and when conditions enabled the promoters to make up their minds the time remaining was comparatively short; hence, a good deal of work had to be hurried somewhat, with the result that, although there was little fault to find with the general arrangements, there were unmistakable evidences in the musical performance of imperfect preparation. The Festival scheme included three Concerts—one for each of the three days of the Festival—and the works brought forward were Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and the first part of Haydn's "Creation," together with a few minor novelties. The performers numbered 300, the chorus consisting of the Cheltenham Festival Society with contingents from societies in union with the County of Gloucester Musical Festival Association, and the band of members of the County of Gloucester Musical Festival Association, with amateur members of the Cheltenham Festival Society. Mr. J. A. Matthews was the conductor. The Festival opened on the 3rd ult. with a performance of the "Golden Legend," which was preceded by half-a-dozen miscellaneous pieces, the most interesting of which was a pleasing orchestral composition entitled "Sevillana" (Scène Espagnole), by Mr. E. Elgar, who conducted its performance. The principals in the cantata were Miss Maggie Davies, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. David Hughes, and Mr. T. Woodward, who discharged their duties satisfactorily. Not only was the choir imperfectly balanced, but the singing was uneven. While the Evening Hymn and a few other portions of the work were fairly well rendered, the more difficult choruses went with less pleasing results.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah," on the second day, was also given with a degree of efficiency scarcely up to festival average. The opening chorus and "Thanks be to God" were rendered in a manner deserving of praise; but there was some tripping in the more intricate and impetuous numbers and there was very little marking of light and shade. Mr. Santley sustained the part of the Prophet with surprising vigour, and the other principal vocalists were Miss Esther Palliser, Madame Marie Hooton, Miss Susah Harrhy, and Mr. James Gawthrop.

In the first part of the "Creation," which made up half the programme on the third day, the solos were allotted to Madame Zippora Monteith, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. Henry Sunman. Again the choruses were unevenly rendered. The body of voices sang with tolerable spir and correctness the easier numbers, but stumbled a difficulties. The band too was frequently at fault. A the new works were comprised in the second part of th programme. "Morning," a pastoral for soprano sol (Madame Monteith) and chorus, composed by Dr. F. Iliffe fo the Festival and conducted by him, proved a well writte work which made a very favourable impression. "Cherr Ripe" and "Waken, lords and ladies gay," two part songs from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer (wh directed their performance), are skilful and effective com positions—particularly the former—and were received wit hearty approval. These pieces were sung, perhaps, bette than anything else during the Festival, the unity of voice and tone-shading calling for warm commendation. Th other new piece was a pleasing Serenata for strings an harps, by Mr. H. J. Taylor, which was conducted by th composer and received with cordiality. It cannot be sai that the Festival was equal in point of musical efficiency to former meetings. Circumstances may, in a measure account for some of the shortcomings; but it is hoped tha mistakes of omission and commission on the presen occasion may be avoided in future.

REVIEWS.

The Morning and Evening Service with the Communion Office in A. By C. Villiers Stanford. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

It goes almost without saying that church music from the pen of Professor Stanford must command respect, and it may be said without delay that the present complete service is in every respect worthy of a musician who has attained a very lofty position in his art. Professor Stanford has, in the present instance, studied the capabilities of fairly well-trained church choirs, avoiding undue elaboration while at the same time imparting such a measure of freshness as would be looked for from so accomplished a musician. The work is fairly comprehensive, the portions of the Liturgy set being the Te Deum, Benedictus, Jubilate, Kyrie, the phrases before and after the Gospel, the Nicene Creed, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Gloria in Excelsis, Magnificat, and the Nunc dimittis; but not the Benedictus qui venit nor the Agnus Dei, now so much used during the celebration. Four-part writing is for the most part adopted, but sometimes the composer employs a double choir. Many examples might be quoted in which the music is made to illustrate, or at any rate to suggest, the sense of the words—occasionally in a startling manner; and, speaking generally, this is one of the most noteworthy of the many services issued during the last few years.

Technical Studies for the Pianoforte. By James Price. [Weekes and Co.]

These exercises bear the impress of having been carefully thought out to meet the requirements of modern pianoforte playing, and they have the merit of accustoming the student to transposition of keys. It is to be regretted, however, that the old German fingering with the cross for the thumb has been adopted instead of the first five numerals now accepted as being the best method and generally used.

The Communion Service. Set to music in A. By George C. Martin. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The organist of St. Paul's Cathedral has here presented a very vigorous setting of the musical portions of the Eucharistic Office, including the Benedictus and the Agnus Dei. The organ accompaniment is bold, and to a great extent independent of the voice parts, in which imitation and fugato passages are sparingly introduced. Though nominally in A major, the relatives of this key are much employed, and Dr. Martin is lavish in his use of chromatic harmonies and progressions in which, of course, the skill of a cultured church musician may be perceived. Well rendered by choir and organist, the service should prove extremely effective.

Lullaby. For Voice, Flute, and Pianoforte. Words nd Music by Georgina M. Rockstro.
Valse Brillante. For Flute and Pianoforte. By W. usé.
Idylle. For Oboe and Pianoforte. By H. Wild.
[Rudall, Carte and Co.]

The spread of the taste for orchestral music has naturlly led to a demand for home pieces embracing other nstruments than the ubiquitous pianoforte. Messrs. udall, Carte seem to be making laudable endeavour to upply what is wanted, and the above tabulated music is a air example of its class. More attention to the flute than he voice has been given by the composer in the "Lullaby," ut the vocal part is grateful to sing and the effect as a hole is pleasing.

The Waltz is "brilliant" for the flute, but comparatively imple for the pianoforte, which latter particular will erchance save flautists some anxiety at sundry "At omes," where young ladies more willing than able olunteer as accompanists.

Mr. Wild's "Idylle" is graceful in character and well esigned for the oboe. Instrumentalists having a fair ommand over the respective instruments will find no ifficulty in these pieces.

The Second Book of Nursery Rhymes. Set to music by oseph S. Moorat. Illustrated by Paul Woodroffe.
[George Allen.]

This volume bears the impress of being a labour of love. hirty-two nursery rhymes, most of them well known, are et with a sympathy for the individual character of the imple stories and an earnestness of purpose to secure uitable musical expression that place the book amongst he productions of genuine art. Amongst the most successful re "Sing a Song of Sixpence," the imitative phrases in he bass echoing the words of the song in an engaging manner; "Old King Cole," in which clever suggestion is nade of "his fiddlers three"; and "Ye King of France," he pomposity of the march of the "twenty thousand men" being admirably expressed, and the putting up of heir swords illustrated with genuine humour. Mr. Woodroffe's drawings include seven full-page illustrations, remarkable for wealth of detail and touches of sly fun. Many of the margins round the songs also abound with elf-like figures and quaint conceits that well repay careful scrutiny. It should be added that while the melodies are within the abilities of little folks, the accompaniments demand the fingers of "mamma" or the governess.

Mass of Our Lady of Ransom. Op. 50. By John Storer.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This is an unpretentious and melodious setting of the Mass for ordinary use in Roman Catholic churches, for which it may at once be said Mr. Storer's music is eminently fitted. It is written for the most part in four-part vocal harmony, which could be correctly read at sight by the majority of choirs. The Kyrie, appropriately devotional in character, is in C minor, and an excellent effect is obtained by the Gloria which follows being in the tonic major. The "Qui tollis" is set as a trio for soprano, tenor, and baritone, who are subsequently joined by the chorus. The passage in the Creed beginning "Crucifixus" is assigned to a baritone soloist, the opening of the Benedictus is given to a tenor voice, and the first twelve bars of the Agnus Dei are written for a soprano. An orchestral accompaniment is indicated in the organ part.

March in E flat. For Organ. By W. S. Hoyte.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Few organists are better acquainted with the resources of their instrument or have wider experience of what is effective on the king of instruments than Mr. Hoyte. This knowledge has been put to excellent use in this March in E flat, which, while presenting few difficulties to the average player, is a bright and melodious composition well calculated to arouse and sustain the interest of an audience. It is in the ordinary form, but the trio possesses much freshness and individuality. The Finale, which is built upon a reiterated figure in the bass, concludes the piece in a brilliant manner.

Time and I. A Song of Spring. Composed by Florence Maris Turner. [Metzler and Co.]

These two songs may be recommended to the home circle. They are poetical in sentiment and melodious and graceful in style. The accompaniments are simple but effective, and display musicianlike ability combined with pleasing fancy.

Romance in A flat. Pianoforte Duet. By Claudius H. Couldery. [Weekes and Co.]

This is an arrangement, by the composer, for pianoforte duet, of the Andante from an Orchestral Suite in C minor, which was recently played at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts. It forms an easy and pleasing pianoforte piece, and makes most demand upon the executant of the second part.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society here opened its twenty-third season, on October 23, with a miscellaneous Concert, in which Miss Marguerite Macintyre, Mr. Maelor Thomas, Mr. David Bispham, and Mr. Mark Hambourg took part, and Mendelssohn's cantata "Hear my Prayer" was rendered by the full chorus and orchestra of the Society, Miss Marguerite Macintyre taking the solo.

On the 5th ult. Mr. Lawrence Walker inaugurated his series of classical Chamber Concerts under the most favourable circumstances.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

There is every prospect that Dr. Hans Richter and his London orchestra will make their visit to Birmingham an annual one. The excellent support given to Dr. Richter's Orchestral Concert, which took place in the Town Hall on October 28, is a sure sign that there is a growing love and appreciation of purely orchestral music in our midst.

Quite an unprecedented number of Chamber Concerts was given last month. On the 9th ult. Miss Marie Olson (pianist), Miss Ethel Barns (violinist), and Mr. Charles Phillips (baritone) gave a delightful Concert in the Masonic Hall. The following night the Gompertz String Quartet gave a Chamber Concert in the same hall. Mrs. Braithwaite was the pianist and Mrs. Montague Fordham the vocalist. A grand Masonic Concert was given on Wednesday of the same week in aid of the Warwickshire Masonic Benevolent and Pupils' Fund. The artists were brothers of the Masonic Brotherhood, and additional help was given by several ladies, wives and friends of Freemasons. Mr. H. Wymark Stratton followed the next night with a Chamber Concert, having for his confrères the Windsor String Quartet—Mr. T. M. Abbott, Herr Heinrich Sück (violins), Mr. T. R. Abbott (viola), and Mr. Joseph Owen (violoncello). The vocalist was Miss Annie Norledge, and the Concert-giver acted in the dual capacity of pianist and accompanist.

An exceptionally interesting and artistic Concert was given in the Masonic Hall, on the 16th ult., by Miss Maude Rihll, a pianist of high attainments, and a pupil of Leschetitzky, of Vienna. The bénéficiaire was assisted by Madame Marie Mallia and Mr. Arthur Walenn as vocalists, Mr. Gerald Walenn (violin), Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello), and Miss Edith Rihll (accompanist).

Sir Joseph Barnby's patriotic song, "Victoria—our Queen," arranged for equal voices and published in Novello's School Songs (No. 273), has been chosen to take the place of the National Anthem at the Annual Prize Distribution in connection with the Five Ways and Camp Hill Schools of King Edward VI. Grammar Schools. We learn that it has been heartily welcomed by the scholars, and is likely to be popular.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The performances by the Bristol Amateur Operatic Society of Sullivan's "The Sorcerer" and "The Mikado," at the Prince's Theatre during the week commencing on the 2nd ult., in aid of the local medical charities, have been the most noteworthy events of the month. The members of the Society are talented and highly trained amateurs, and the representations they gave of the popular operas were exceptionally good all round. Mr. A. Bruce Bedells, the musical director and stage manager, must have felt well rewarded for his exertions by the results secured.

The Bristol contingent of the Crystal Palace Temperance Choir, who won the second prize at the Autumnal Provincial Festival of the National Temperance Choral Union, held at Birmingham, gave a Concert on the 2nd ult., when they sang excellently Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," Handel's "Sing unto God," Sterndale Bennett's "Come, live with me," and other compositions, under the direction of Mr. F. Stone.

The Popular Chamber Concerts at Clifton entered upon the twelfth season on the 14th ult., the executants, among whom changes have taken place, being Herr Otto Milani, Herr Otto Heinrich (violins), Mr. Ernest Lane (viola), Mr. Edward Pavey (violoncello), and Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte).

A Concert given on the 16th ult., by the choir of the Baptist Church, Totterdown, is deserving of notice because of the wonderful spirit and artistic excellence with which they sang several part-songs and glees under the direction of Mr. H. J. Pollard. The skilled body of vocalists should form the nucleus of a choral society for the populous and rapidly growing district of Bristol.

The Mid-Somerset Ladies' Orchestral Society gave a Concert, at Midsomer Norton, on October 27, and played compositions by Schubert, Beethoven, Rossini, Haydn, and the three Dances from German's music to "Henry VIII.," which are becoming increasingly popular. The Society is making encouraging progress.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The first Orchestral Concert of the Dublin Musical Society took place, on the 18th ult., in the Royal University, Earlsfort Terrace. The programme was judiciously made up, containing numbers calculated to please lovers of all classes of music. The chief feature in the programme, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, with which the second part opened, was, on the whole, admirably interpreted, although at times lacking the delicacy of performance and intimate understanding which only come to a band after long practice together. It is safe to prophesy that these desiderata will come in their time. The first Subscription Concert of the Society is announced for the 3rd inst., when Tinel's "St. Francis" will be performed; and prospective arrangements are Sullivan's "Golden Legend" for February, Beethoven's "Engedi" with the third act of "Tannhäuser" for April, and presumably "The Messiah," as usual, at Christmas; also two more of the welcome Orchestral Concerts.

The Royal Dublin Society's new Lecture Theatre has not been completed in time for the opening of the Recitals of Classical Music, which consequently took place in the old Library on the afternoon of the 9th ult. It consisted of pianoforte music only, and the executant, Signor Esposito, displayed his usual faultless technique and admirable taste.

A scheme of Symphony Concerts has been announced in the Dublin Press by Herr Theodore Werner, who proposes to form an orchestra of about seventy members, and to give during the forthcoming season a series of first-class grand orchestral concerts. For each concert one or other of the following distinguished conductors is to be secured: Mr. George Henschel, Mr. August Manns, Signor Randegger, Dr. Hans Richter, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Arthur Sullivan, and Professor C. V. Stanford.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The customary Annual Concert on behalf of the Norwich District Railway Guards' Friendly Society, given in St. Andrew's Hall, on October 29, proved of more than usual interest, for although the vocal selections were chiefly old favourites, they were remarkably well interpreted by the artists engaged: Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Violin solos were contributed by Miss Ethel Barns, and Signor Bisaccia, in addition to playing most of the accompaniments, was heard in two pianoforte solos.

The new season of the Saturday evening Popular Organ Recitals, under the direction of Dr. Edward Bunnett, Corporation organist, was opened on the 7th ult., under rather depressing circumstances, drenching showers and cold winds causing a thin attendance. In addition to a capital programme of organ selections, which it need hardly be said were cleverly played, Miss Maggie Purvis (soprano) and Mr. Sawford Dye, a very rising local tenor, contributed several songs.

The Downham Market Orchestral Society (whose resuscitation was announced in last month's Musical Times) came before the public on October 29, conducted by Mr. C. H. Lewis. The band numbered twenty-five instrumentalists, and, considering the short time they have had for rehearsals, gave a very fair account of the work they undertook. The vocal part of the programme was sustained by Miss K. Comber, Miss A. Dewberry, Mr. A. J. Davies, and Mr. F. A. Tipple.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. d'Albert's second appearance in Edinburgh, at the first of Messrs. Paterson's series of Orchestral Concerts, confirmed the impressions he made at his Pianoforte Recital last month. In the "Emperor" Concerto his broad, simple and noble conception of the solo part showed more than anything at his Recital what a great player he is. He was recalled three times.

At the same Concert the Scottish Orchestra made its first appearance for the season. The careful nuances in the "Meistersinger" Overture gave abundant evidence of diligent and careful rehearsal and of Mr. Kes's command of his forces. Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony was well if rather boisterously played. Some of the delicate scoring in the slow movement and the Menuet was delightfully reproduced, but the last movement was given too noisily.

On the 7th ult. Lady Hallé paid her first visit to Edinburgh since Sir Charles Hallé's death. An excellent house was somewhat undemonstrative. The most successful numbers in a somewhat severe programme were Sonatas by Handel and Beethoven, Schubert's Fantasia, and two Hungarian Dances (Brahms-Joachim), which latter drew an enthusiastic encore. Lady Hallé was assisted by Miss Olga Néruda.

Señor Sarasate has not for several years made such a deep impression on his Edinburgh audience as at his Recital on the 14th ult. The Music Hall was very full, and the enthusiastic applause and double recall which greeted the first number (Bach's First Sonata) showed how well the great violinist held his audience. Professor Neitzel accompanied Señor Sarasate with conspicuous success.

A very delightful Concert was given by Miss Katherine Alston, in the Freemasons' Hall, on the 11th ult. The Concert-giver sang a very representative selection of songs by composers from Schumann to Arensky, and in each showed her artistic taste, genuine appreciation, and cultivated style. The Arensky songs had a peculiar interest to the audience and were highly appreciated. Miss Alston had the advantage of Mr. Plunket Greene's assistance, who sang, in the expressive manner which has gained him such deserved popularity, songs by Schubert, Clay, &c., and ballads from old France, Scotland, Ireland, and England. Miss Pierrepont made a well-nigh perfect accompanist, although her solos, selected from modern composers, did not achieve such distinct success as those by Scarlatti, Bach, and Daquin.

Pianoforte and Vocal Recitals have also been given in the Freemasons' Hall by Mr. Della Torre, Miss Gibb, and Mr. A. B. Bach.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company gave the "Meistersinger" on the 19th ult.; Mr. Hedmondt as Walther and Mr. Homer Lund as Beckmesser divided the honours with Herr Eckhold the painstaking conductor. The "Walküre" was promised a first hearing in Edinburgh on the 25th ult.

The first of Professor Niecks's University Concerts was given on the 18th ult., when an interesting programme from the vocal works of early Italian masters was presented by Miss Gordon Pillans, Miss Gaukroger, Mr. Norman Davidson, and Mr. A. B. Buch. Instrumental examples were contributed by Mrs. Buch (pianoforte) and Professor Niecks (violin).

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The series of Choral and Orchestral Union Concerts was successfully inaugurated on the evening of the 10th ult. St. Andrew's Hall presented, indeed, a brilliant appearance, and if the subscriptions have not as yet reached the desirable level, an encouraging measure of support has been accorded the directors. The programme now under notice was certainly alluring, and many folks were doubtless drawn to our leading concert-room by reason of the re-appearance of Mr. Eugene d'Albert in his native city. The orchestra was in admirable form for a "first night"—so good, indeed, that, notwithstanding the many changes in the personnel, there is no difficulty in predicting great things from Mr. Kes and his coadjutors during the season. Miss Kirkby Lunn, fresh from her triumphs with the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, very soon made friends with her audience. At the "popular" Concert on Saturday evening, the 14th ult., the attendance was also very encouraging. Madame Marian McKenzie, who was in excellent voice, sang with her wonted artistic taste, and the programme included Meyerbeer's "Schiller" March, Beethoven's Symphony (No. 1), a selection from Rubinstein's "Feramors" ballet music, and the ever-popular Overture to "Zampa."

Regrettably enough, the attendance at the first Choral Concert of the series was depressing in the extreme. This was all the more surprising, because Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion Music was revived after slumbering for over twenty years. The soloists comprised Miss Marie Fillunger, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. W. A. Peterkin, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Robert Kaufmann. The Scottish orchestra supplied the necessary band accompaniments, Mr. Luther Hall was at the pianoforte, and Mr. Thomas Berry had charge of the organ.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded a successful season at the Theatre Royal on the 14th ult. The "Valkyrie," beautifully mounted and performed with all-round artistic effect, attracted a large audience. "Don Giovanni" was also twice played to packed audiences, and the "Bohemian Girl" and "Maritana" once more showed that the ballad opera is still an important factor to reckon with in this district.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Again it is the instrumental side of art that must be dealt with in regard to matters of chief interest in this city and district. Among the things that have attracted large crowds of musical amateurs during the past month have been a remarkably fine performance on the organ in St. George's Hall by Mr. Auguste Weigand; an interesting Pianoforte Recital in the small concert-room by Mr. Stavenhagen; an "old world" evening at the Winter Entertainment series by the Dolmetsch party; an extremely pleasant "Sunday afternoon with Schubert" at the Picton Hall by Messrs. Courvoisier, Welsing, and Austin; and a couple of Matinées at Dreaper's Rooms.

In regard to more extensive things, a Richter Concert claims first attention, and a finer rendering of Tschaïkowsky's "Pathétique" Symphony than that accorded it would be difficult to imagine.

Of chief magnitude as a leading local organisation must next be dealt with the first Smoking Concert of the Orchestral Society, as conductor of which Mr. Steudner Welsing did excellent service in the place of Mr. Rodewald, who was absent in America. Mr. Theodore Lawson's playing of the "Dramatic" Concerto of Spohr stood well to the front.

The Società Armonica, despite the serious illness of its new conductor, Mr. Akeroyd, and an unpleasant accident which had laid aside his deputy, Mr. Welsing, gave a capital inaugural Concert in its rehabilitated condition on the 2nd ult., under Mr. John Ross, who is now-a-days too seldom seen in the conductor's seat. The programme was one of the best that comes to memory, although it was the 109th undertaken by the Society, and it included selections from Cesar Cui's orchestral suite "In Modo Popolari" and a number of other worthy contributions.

The choral events of the past few weeks have been the performances of a highly acceptable cantata, "The Childhood of Samuel," by Dr. C. T. Reynolds, under the bâton of the composer, at Birkenhead; Haydn's "Creation," under Mr. William Lockier, at Aintree; Handel's "Israel in Egypt," under Mr. Hudson, at Southport; and Sullivan's "Golden Legend," under Mr. F. H. Cowen, by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society. The last-named organisation also announced a Concert for the 24th ult.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It was inevitable that during the past twelve months some degree of anxiety should be felt lest the continued prosperity might be endangered of the great Orchestral Concerts which unquestionably stand in the forefront of all our musical doings. During the last forty years the progress of the art has, throughout England (and certainly not less in Manchester than elsewhere), fully kept pace with the advance of general knowledge and of all that tends to render life pleasant and happy. In that progress the Hallé Concerts have played an important part, and by it their continuance has been rendered possible. An interest in music and the capability to enter into a fuller enjoyment of it have been spread abroad until the institutions which sufficed half-a-century ago have become utterly out of date and insufficient to meet the requirements of the thousands who flock to our larger halls, not merely to meet their friends or to have a pleasant chat, but intent upon the study both of the classics and of the greater works of the later masters. Every season shows the rapid increase of a critical knowledge, of a deeper insight into music, and of a higher appreciation of its meaning and value; and, while it is necessary that smaller suburban societies, wherein enthusiastic amateurs meet for the diligent and persevering study of instrumental and choral works, should maintain their healthy vitality, it is doubly important that at this juncture every lover of music should be zealous for the maintenance of those Thursday evening gatherings, now in their thirty-ninth session, which alone are able to meet the expense of performances of the highest pretension. To establish the Manchester Orchestra upon a permanent basis is a matter of the greatest moment, not only in this one city, but to the whole of the North of England and to our neighbours all around. Nothing should be suffered which could in any way divert into other and minor channels energies which should be devoted to secure the continuance here of that staff of instrumentalists which, if dispersed, could only with great difficulty and delay be again united, and without which many of our smaller undertakings would unavoidably succumb. The rendering of the "Oberon" Overture, of Haydn's Symphony in G (letter V), of the Wagner music, and of other works has never been equalled in the Free Trade Hall; and, each week, Mr. Cowen gives further evidence of the wisdom displayed by the management in entrusting the direction to him. The soloists were Señor Sarasate, at the first meeting, and Mr. Eugene d'Albert at the third; the vocalists being Madame Kate Lee and Mrs. Helen Trust. For "The Redemption" (the 5th ult.) the principals included Miss Ella Russell, Miss Greta Williams, Messrs. Bantock Pierpoint, Douglas Powell, and Ben Davies. Mr. Edward Lloyd gave some variety to the Wagner programme of the 19th ult., of which the instrumental portion seemed, like the Richter provincial selections, to be confined to a narrow stereotyped répertoire.

During the recess the choir of the Hallé Concerts has been re-modelled by the able director, Mr. R. H. Wilson, with evident gain of purity of tone, especially among the sopranos and tenors.

The performance of the "Creation" by Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Society, with an efficient band and the assistance of Miss Macintyre, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black, demands notice of the greatly increased efficiency of the choir and the general completeness.

The Saturday Night Popular Concerts are meeting an evident demand. Of course the band is, and must ever be, the main attraction to real lovers of music; and Mr. Cowen, without stooping to any unworthy triviality in his selections, judiciously arranges the programmes in line with the holiday feeling, and the desire for relaxation which attach to the evening that closes a week's labour and business anxiety.

The first (or Patti) Concert of Mr. Harrison, in association with Messrs. Hime and Addison, of this city, was a great success.

Peculiarly gratifying is it to see the improved prospects of chamber music among us. Mr. Carl Fuchs has already given two most excellent programmes at the Schiller Anstalt; having, at the first, the assistance of Mr. Willy Hess, and at the second that of Madame Marie Soldat. Mr. Max Mayer, who, besides aiding Mr. Fuchs on the 18th ult., has given the first of his own series at the Concert Hall, with Madame Soldat and Mr. Paersch. Messrs. Leonard Borwick and Plunket Greene attracted a fairly large and very warm-hearted audience to the immense Free Trade Hall; and Mr. Brodsky has undertaken to give, during the winter, five performances by his delightful quartet party.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Of the Concerts that have taken place in this locality during the past month, the most important were the two performances of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," respectively by the Sunderland Philharmonic Society and the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union. The performance of the Sunderland Philharmonic Society took place in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, on the 3rd ult., the principal artists being Madame Alice Esty, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that this was, artistically, the best Concert given by the Sunderland Society for several years. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted with customary discretion, and is to be congratulated upon the successful result of his labour.

The second performance alluded to—that of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union—took place in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on the 17th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Mabel Berrey, Madame L. Dews, Mr. Norman McLeod Jones, and Mr. Andrew Black, all of whom were successful in their respective parts. Great care had evidently been taken in preparing the work. An excellent orchestra of about fifty performers was engaged for the occasion, and contributed materially to the successful rendering of the oratorio. Mr. James M. Preston conducted with skill and discretion.

At the first Concert of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society, on October 29, Beethoven's String Quartet in C (Op. 59) and Dvorák's Quartet (Op. 96), also for strings, were admirably played by Señor Arbos, Mr. Inwards, Mr. Hobday, and Mr. Ludwig. The vocalist was Mr. David Bispham, whose singing was greatly admired.

During the week's engagement of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, at the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle, commencing on October 26, the following operas were given: "Tannhäuser" (twice), "Carmen," "Bohemian Girl," "Valkyrie," "Mignon," and "Faust."

In consequence of the success of the performance of "Elijah" by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, on the 17th ult., the work was repeated in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 25th ult., in popular form, the soloists on this occasion being Miss Annie Nelson, Miss Helen Rae, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. Preston again conducted and Mr. Thomas Wilkinson presided at the organ.

On the 21st ult. an interesting Pianoforte and Violin Recital was given in the New Assembly Rooms, Newcastle, by Messrs. Sigmund and Alfred Oppenheim, assisted by Miss S. Martin as vocalist.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The large audience which well-nigh filled the Albert Hall on the occasion of Miss Cantelo's Recital, on October 22, was a well-earned tribute of the esteem which her pianoforte playing has gained and testifies to the increasing appreciation of classical music which is apparent in Nottingham. Mr. Willy Hess was Miss Cantelo's colleague in the interpretation of the programme, the first piece of which was Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, most exquisitely rendered. Miss Cantelo's solos were Schumann's "Carneval," Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses," Rubinstein's "Concert Etude," and an Andante by Grieg, in which she displayed thorough musicianship and breadth of expression. After Vieuxtemps's Ballade and Polonaise Mr. Hess was twice recalled.

On October 28 the Sacred Harmonic Society opened its season with a Concert-Recital of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet." The orchestral work was entrusted to the Hallé orchestra, under the bâton of Mr. F. H. Cowen; and Gounod's charming orchestration, so full of appropriate tone colour, was effectively given. The choruses had evidently received careful rehearsal at the hands of Dr. William Lemare (the new conductor of the Society), with the result that the articulation, phrasing, and expression, so extremely essential in dramatic music, left nothing to be desired. The illness of Madame Fanny Moody, almost at the last moment, threatened disaster; but her place was excellently filled by Miss Esther Palliser, as Juliet. Mr. E. C. Hedmondt gave as good a rendering of Romeo's part as could be expected on a concert platform, and at times rose to a high level of dramatic expression. Mr. Charles Manners's remarkably clear articulation was of great value in the part of Friar Laurence. The other principal rôles were entrusted to Miss Gertrude Izard, Miss Isa Balfour, Messrs. Arthur Walenn, Dever, Albert, Collings, and Walter Ford.

The Richter Concert on October 29 attracted an enormous audience.

Mr. Carl Armbruster's Lecture on Classical Song was worthy of a better audience. The illustrations were sung by Miss Pauline Cramer.

The first of the Nottingham Chamber Concerts given this season by Messrs. Ellenberger and Thorpe took place on the 11th ult. As usual the programme was free from hackneyed pieces.

On the 19th ult. Miss Margaret Clark gave a Concert in the Albert Hall. Miss Clark has recently returned from a course of three years' study in Berlin, under Dr. Joachim, and the local interest in her début as a soloist caused large advanced bookings of seats. Miss Clark has developed a fine tone and broad style under Dr. Joachim, and is a most valuable acquisition to classical concerts. Her rendering of the two movements of the Max Bruch Concerto showed power and intellectuality worthy of an older player, and Spohr's Barcarolle was interpreted with great taste.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. Eugene d'Albert visited Sheffield on the 16th ult. and gave a successful Recital in the Albert Hall. His programme included Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata—his best effort—his own arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, a group of Chopin pieces, Liszt's difficult "Don Giovanni" Fantasia, and other works. Though coolly received at first, Mr. d'Albert's playing ultimately aroused the enthusiasm of the audience, and he was several times recalled.

Miss Lilian Hovey gave an Elocutionary Recital, in the Montgomery Hall, on the 13th ult. The programme was agreeably varied and served to display the Reciter's versatile talents. Tennyson's "Defence of Lucknow" was marked by dramatic grip and faultless inflection, "Maud Müller" had a sympathetic rendering, and in several lighter contributions Miss Hovey proved that in either direction her elocutionary skill can supply all demands upon it. In Poe's "The Raven" Miss Hovey was associated with Mr. J. A. Rodgers, who played Stanley Hawley's sympathetic musical accompaniment to the poem. Miss Mary Hovey (of Liverpool), a clever violinist, and Mr. Rodgers played solos.

On the 26th ult. the Sheffield Musical Union gave a Concert at which all the pieces were from the pen of Dr. Henry Coward, the Society's popular conductor. In thus honouring their chief the members performed a graceful act and recognised many years of arduous and self-denying work. The "Story of Bethany" occupied the first part of the programme, and the second part contained several specially composed part-songs, songs, &c. Dr. Coward conducted.

The Doncaster Musical Society performed Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," in the Corn Exchange, on the 6th ult., Mr. H. C. Mackenzie conducted and Mr. C. Reasbeck led the orchestra. The work was admirably rendered, the singing of the chorus being particularly good. A miscellaneous programme concluded the Concert.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Salisbury Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Alfred Foley, gave a successful Concert, at the County Hall, on the 16th ult. The choir was heard to advantage in Eaton Faning's "Song of the Vikings," Gade's "Spring's Message," and some well-chosen part-songs by Leslie, Pinsuti, and King. Cowen's "Four English Dances" formed the chief orchestral feature of the Concert, which was further contributed to by the Meister Glee Singers and Madame Kate Lee. Miss Nellie Harding led the orchestra, and Miss Hatch and Mr. Bracher shared the duties of accompanist. The Wylye Choral and Orchestral Society, which has been recently organised, made its second appearance on the 11th ult. The programme included Eaton Faning's part-song "The Miller's Wooing" and some well-sung glees. Amongst the orchestral numbers were the Shepherds' Dance from German's incidental music to "Henry VIII." and other pieces of a light character.

A performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" took place at Trowbridge, on the 23rd ult., conducted by Mr. H. Millington. The principal vocalists engaged were Miss Ethel Winn, Miss Minnie Hackett, Mr. S. Masters, and Mr. D. Harrison. The chorus and orchestra numbered about 120 performers, the latter being led by Mr. Duys and Mr. W. Millington.

On the 18th ult. a performance of Gaul's cantata "The Holy City" was given in St. John's Church, Boscombe, by the members of the choir, assisted by amateurs of the neighbourhood. Mr. Arthur T. George, organist of the church, directed the performance.

A programme, consisting of compositions by Gounod, was presented by the Southampton Philharmonic Society at its Concert on the 26th ult. The following solo vocalists were announced to appear: Miss Zippora Monteith, Mr. Frederick Williams, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. Mr. H. M. Pike conducted.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE

(From our own Correspondent.)

The most important musical event at Leeds during the past month has been the Concert given by the Leeds Choral Union, an association formed only a year ago. Though not a few ardent chorus-singers are members of both the Choral Union and the old-established Philharmonic Society, the two bodies are in the main distinct, so that Leeds can fairly boast of two efficient choirs, each numbering over three hundred voices. It can hardly boast with equal security of two audiences, and the Town Hall was barely filled on the 3rd ult., when the Choral Union opened its season with Berlioz's "Faust." The performance was good, if not brilliant, and a certain reticence in the chorus-singing in the more forcible and dramatic passages is no doubt attributable to want of experience in the newly formed chorus. On the other hand, such delicate music as the "Faust's Dream" chorus was charmingly sung. Mr. Benton, the conductor, had evidently taken great pains to teach his singers the meaning of pianissimo, which is not always grasped by the West Riding intellect. The soloists were more than satisfactory. Miss Mabel Berrey was evidently nervous on her first appearance in Leeds, which, as a Festival town, has a strange fascination for aspiring vocalists; but she sang very unaffectedly and with genuine expression. Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Bispham need no comment, save that the latter seemed to miss, to some extent, the grim humour of Mephistopheles. Mr. C. Knowles was quite a satisfactory Brander.

The enterprising Messrs. Haddock began their Musical Evenings on October 27, and have since given four more.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra is a society that has not only deserved success, it has achieved it. Its Concerts always command large audiences, and it speaks well for the love of good music in Bradford that the galleries of St. George's Hall were so crowded on October 24, when Professor Stanford came to conduct a programme made up entirely of his own works. The new Norwich work, "Phaudrig Crohoore," headed the programme, and proved a delightful example of the composer's resource in treating such a theme, though bare justice was done to it by the singers, whose occasional indecision seemed to indicate insufficient preparation. The "Revenge," the "Irish" Symphony, and songs given by Mr. Plunket Greene made up the rest of the programme. The chorus was that of the Festival Choral Society, whose apparent want of preparation may have been due to the fact that they were at the time fully occupied in rehearsing Dr. Parry's "King Saul," of which they gave a most creditable performance, with the assistance of the Permanent Orchestra, on the 6th ult. The cast of soloists was remarkable for its youth, but equally so for its excellence. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Miss Morfydel Williams, Messrs. William Green and J. Sandbrook are all young artists, but they sang with exceptional enthusiasm and ability. Mr. William Thornton, a local bass, was also completely satisfying as Samuel, so that the solo portions of the work suffered nothing at the hands of its interpreters. Dr. Parry himself conducted, and was most cordially received.

The Subscription Concerts began their thirty-second season on October 30. That the Hallé band is not likely to lose prestige under Mr. Cowen's conductorship was indicated by an unusually finished performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, the only fault of which was a tendency to drag the tempi. Tschaïkowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture was also finely played. Lady Hallé played the first Max Bruch Concerto with her usual refined charm, and Miss Macintyre was the vocalist.

At the Huddersfield Subscription Concert, on the 3rd ult., the illness of Miss Sofia Ravogli necessitated both her absence and that of her sister; Miss Landi and Miss de Sales were, however, obtained at the eleventh hour and proved satisfactory substitutes. Mr. Stavenhagen was the pianist, and, as usual, showed his complete sympathy with Liszt, while Mr. Dunn's extraordinary technique was shown in violin music by Tartini, Spohr, Bazzini, and Ernst. On the 17th another great representative of the Liszt School made his first appearance in the West Riding. But the performances of Mr. d'Albert, both here and in other Yorkshire towns, will be more conveniently chronicled together in our next letter.

The excellent Subscription Concerts at Halifax were resumed on October 28, when Messrs. Borwick and Plunket Greene gave one of their delightful Recitals of pianoforte and vocal music. On the 12th ult. the Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. W. H. Garland, gave its "jubilee" performance of "Elijah." Mr. Andrew Black was the Elijah, and, with Miss Palliser, Madame Dews, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos, formed a satisfactory quartet of soloists. The chorus sang well, if hardly so well as one has been led to expect at Halifax, and the band was unusually efficient for a "scratch" orchestra.

The Dewsbury Choral Society held its "Elijah" celebration on the 10th ult. The principals were Miss Maggie Davies, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. David Hughes, who, if not brilliant interpreters of their respective parts, were at least thoroughly capable. The chorus-singing showed the result of careful drilling, and Mr. G. H. Hirst's conducting was, as usual, marked by much intelligence and independent thought. The same quartet of vocalists, with Mr. John Dunn as violinist and Miss Marguerite Swale as pianist, gave, on behalf of the Morley Choral Society, a miscellaneous Concert on the 9th that was undistinguished in programme and not over-artistic in performance, a tendency to exaggeration spoiling the efforts of several of the artists. On the 10th ult. the Keighley Musical Union gave Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" and Gade's "Crusaders." Miss Annie Nelson, Miss Lord, Mr. Shakespeare Robinson, and Mr. Stanley Cookson were the principal vocalists, and the performances, under Mr. Arthur Burnley's conductorship, seem to have given very general satisfaction. The Hull Harmonic Society, on the 10th ult., resuscitated Costa's "Eli," which still, it would appear, has some admirers. The principals were Madame Sadler Fogg, Miss Edna Thornton, Messrs. Harper Kearton, Wm. Thornton, and J. Hall. Mr. Walter Porter conducted.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The revival of "Don Giovanni" at the Opéra has been an important artistic event. The work was first produced here, in 1811, at the Théâtre Italien, and was not brought out at the Opéra until 1834. As a matter of artistic propriety, "Don Giovanni" should have stood in no need of a revival, since the immortal work should never have been taken off the répertoire. Its present reprise is an imposing spectacle, but it certainly is not the classical version of the opera, while the interspersed ballets, albeit danced to Mozartean numbers, only serve to enhance the spectacular effect. The work is lavishly mounted in all respects. As regards prospective arrangements at this house, but little is as yet known. Rehearsals of M. Bruneau's "Messidor" are still in progress, and a new ballet, "L'Etoile," by M. Wormser, is also in preparation. There is also talk of M. Bourgault-Ducoudray's "Thamara" being shortly placed on the repertory again.

The new season of M. Lamoureux was inaugurated on October 18 with a popular festival Concert, which attracted an enormous crowd and was made the occasion of numerous and deserved ovations offered to the eminent conductor. Although the Concerts of the 1st and 8th ult. presented no novel feature, they included works of the very highest interest, such as the Symphony in D minor, by César Franck, and Isolde's Liebestod, sung by Madame Alba Chrétien, who possesses a very fine voice and excellent musicianlike qualities. During M. Lamoureux's absence in London, his place at these Concerts was occupied by the Czech Quartet Party, whose sterling qualities are sufficiently known, and to whom an enthusiastic audience paid the practical compliment of appearing in numbers fully equal to those usually recorded at the symphonic concerts.

M. Colonne, on his part, recommenced his performances on October 25 with a programme exclusively devoted to French composers, after which the popular conductor departed for Odessa, for the purpose of directing a Concert of French music in that town, with, it is said, considerable success. Thus the Concerts given on the 8th and 15th ult. presented some novel features, both as regards the programme and its conductor, the latter being M. Winogradsky, the famous Russian chef d'orchestre, and the former consisting entirely of works by Russian composers. M. Winogradsky is a very remarkable conductor, and the exuberance of his movements is astonishing, while the effects he obtains from the orchestra are truly superb. M. Marck Hambourg was the pianist, and was greatly appreciated in his rendering of the Fourth Concerto by Rubinstein. He is undoubtedly a very excellent artist.

Glinka's "Life for the Czar" has at length been given—viz., on October 19, at the Nouveau Théâtre. A work of such importance requires, however, at least an adequate preparation, and such not having been by any means accorded it in the present instance the critical voices as to its merits have been necessarily reserved, while rendering justice to the talent of the interpreters, especially MM. Engel and Devoyod.

The annual distribution of prizes and performance of the successful works took place on October 31 at the Institut. Of the latter, an "Ouverture de fête," by M. Busser, is ably written but wanting in individuality, while a cantata by M. Mouquet, who obtained the Prix de Rome for the current year, is a very conventional composition, with the exception of its rather remarkable prelude.

At the Conservatoire, the poëme lyrique "Aude et Roland" of MM. Hartmann and Adénis, set to music by M. Léon Honoré, which obtained the Rossini Prize, was produced on the 15th ult. It is an essentially melodious work, in accordance, indeed, with the conditions laid down in the competition, and apt to become rather monotonous. It was well rendered by M. Noté, Mdlle. Lafarge, and M. Gauthier, and in its latter portion was greatly applauded.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The activities of the new season are gradually getting under way in New York. The venture of the Mapleson Opera Company at the old Academy of Music has thus far proved an eminently successful one from a practical point of view, though it has not served to bring forward anything very extraordinary from the artistic side as yet. Perhaps the most marked feature of the performances which have been given is the excellence of the orchestra which, under Signor Bimboni, has made a high record for itself. The forces of the Metropolitan Company are gathering now, and the rival opera houses will soon be in full swing. At the close of the Abbey and Grau season at the Metropolitan there will be a short season of German opera by Mr. Damrosch's company.

During the season the usual number of concerts will be given by the Philharmonic Society and by the Symphony Society, while the new Symphony Orchestra, under the lead of Mr. Sam Franke, will play three times, and the Boston Band will make its usual number of visits. The Bostonians will play a Bruckner Symphony as one of their novelties.

Up to the present writing no new choral society has made its appearance in New York. The Oratorio Society, the Musical Art Society, and the New York Choral Society will, apparently therefore, have the field all to themselves.

In Church music the past summer has witnessed an unusual number of changes and activities in and about New York. Mr. Charles Heinroth, a pupil of Rheinberger, who only very recently returned from his studies, has been appointed to the organist's post at the Church of the Ascension.

The choirs are beginning to hold the harvestide choral festivals so common at this season of the year. The first one of these of more than ordinary importance will be given by the newly-formed choir guild of the diocese of Connecticut, in St. John's Church, Bridgeport. The home choir, and those of Trinity, New Haven; St. Andrew's, Meriden; and St. Andrew's, Stamford, will take part, and the service will include Stainer's setting in A of the evening Canticles, and anthems by Beethoven, Martin, and other composers.

The first public service held under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists will be held at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, in a few weeks. Special soloists of note have been engaged, and the chorus will consist of the combined choirs of St. Bartholomew's, All Souls', and the South Reformed Church. All of these choirs are made up of men and women. It is proposed to do away with the services of a conductor, but several of the better-known members of the Guild will officiate at the organ by turns, and each organist will rehearse the choir on the work which he is himself to accompany. Mr. H. R. Shelley, Mr. R. Huntington Woodman, and Mr. Gerrit Smith will probably play different portions of the service. Bishop Potter is to make the address, and the chaplain of the Guild, the Rev. Charles C. Hall, of Brooklyn, will conduct the service. An examination of candidates for associate-ship in the Guild was held a few weeks ago, and two candidates out of three satisfied the examiners. The successful gentlemen were Messrs. A. B. Spencer, of Stamford, Conn., and Mr. Frank Chase, of Jacksonville, Florida.

A rather unique service was performed on the evening of All Saints' Day, at St. Peter's (Westchester), New York. The principal part of it consisted of a cantata, "The Vision of St. John," composed by Mr. C. Whitney Coombs, organist of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York. The work is scored for a solo tenor, a quartet or chorus of female voices in four parts, and the usual four-part chorus. The church contains two organs, and on this occasion the female voices were drawn from the choir of St. Bartholomew's, New York, and were placed in the West organ gallery, where Mr. Warren, of St. Bartholomew's, presided over the large organ. The solo tenor and the regular vested choir of the parish (boys and men) occupied the chancel stalls, and the antiphonal effects, dexterously managed across the intervening space, were striking. The whole service went with commendable freedom and dash, while the boys' voices showed a high degree of refinement and training.

We have on a previous occasion drawn attention to successful performances of British music in that very musical as well as very charming art centre, Düsseldorf, Rhenish Prussia, and it is with genuine satisfaction that we now chronicle an event, rare, if not unique, in the annals of British music. We refer to a Concert arranged and conducted by a German musician, the programme of which devoted a whole part to works by British composers. The garrison of Düsseldorf includes the Fusilier Regiment, No. 39, whose band is considered one of the most efficient in the German army. The bandmaster is Herr Königl. Musikdirigent W. Kohn, whose talent as a conductor and genuine artistic temperament are matched by an eclectic taste as regards foreign music none too frequently found amongst the musicians of the Fatherland. As is the case in some of our own crack regiments, the bandsmen of the 39th form, also, a thoroughly efficient string or symphony orchestra, and give a great many high-class concerts all the year round. It was at such an Orchestral Concert, on the 12th ult., that Herr Kohn presented to the Düsseldorfers a selection of British music, consisting of the Overture "Land of the mountain and the flood," Hamish MacCunn; Benedictus, Sir A. C. Mackenzie; and three Dances—(a) Morris Dance, (b) Shepherds' Dance, (c) Torch Dance—from the music to "Henry VIII.," Edward German. The General Anzeiger, the most influential as well as the most widely-circulated local paper, refers to the Concert in these terms: "The Overture by MacCunn, the Benedictus by Mackenzie, and the three Dances by Edward German served to demonstrate that the prejudice against English music generally existing amongst us is no doubt to be attributed to our unfamiliarity with the works of British composers rather than to their unpalatableness. A prejudice once created, and even more firmly established through thoughtless reiteration, is only removed with the greatest difficulty, and it is therefore worthy of every acknowledgment that the conductor of a German military band undertakes to make himself acquainted with the terra incognita of English music and open it to the German public. The very liberal applause proved that the English compositions under notice were quite to the taste of the audience, though it was no doubt partly called forth by the excellent performances of the well-trained orchestra." We hope Herr Kohn will persevere in his attempt to familiarise his countrymen with British orchestral music, and that some of his colleagues will follow his example. Meanwhile we hail the small beginning as a welcome sign.

The Principal of the Royal College of Music has made an appeal to the musical public on behalf of the People's Concert Society. For some years back one of its chief centres of work has been the Westminster Town Hall, where, during the winter months, Concerts of first-rate kind have been given on Sunday evenings. Though primarily intended for the "masses," these Concerts have been appreciated by numbers of people of the better class, who show their enjoyment of the music provided for them by punctual attendance and intelligent interest in the music. Here, unfortunately, their participation in the scheme ends. No charge is made for admission to its Sunday Concerts; and the amount of the collections made at Westminster is so ludicrously inadequate, as well as in such forcible contrast to the well-dressed appearance of many of the audience, that it has been found necessary, after many ineffectual appeals, to give up the Westminster Concerts altogether after Christmas next. It is probably thoughtlessness that brings about so lamentable a state of affairs. Anyhow, these things ought not so to be.

Mr. David Bispham's Concert, at St. James's Hall, on October 31, prior to his departure for America, possessed a very distinctive feature in the four "Serious Songs" (Op. 121) of Brahms, not previously given in London. Scripture has been drawn upon for the text of these pieces, three of which are taken from Ecclesiastes. In lofty thought and in earnestness of expression these songs are worthy a master whose purpose through life has been the augmentation of the dignity of his art. Naturally they are sad in tone, but the apostrophe to death in the third song of the series is so noble, so sympathetic, and so sincere as to yield consolation instead of producing despair. They were sung in a most imposing manner by Mr. Bispham, and made a deep impression on the large audience. This true artist also sang several lighter pieces, in every instance with correct spirit. Mdlle. Landi was the other vocalist. Mr. Johannes Wolff contributed violin pieces, and Mr. H. Bird was at the pianoforte.

Mr. Walter Ford's Concert in the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 6th ult., was interesting alike with respect to the pieces and the performers. A severe cold prevented the appearance of Miss Fillunger, but Mrs. Henschel came forward in her stead and with unsurpassable charm gave several songs differing in style, among them Schumann's "Auftrage" and Mr. Henschel's "Shouggie Shou" and "There was an ancient king." Mr. Walter Ford's choice was also varied, though a high standard was maintained throughout. His rendering of Somervell's setting of "Tears, idle tears," of Sterndale Bennett's "Maiden mine," and of Miss Carmichael's arrangement of Galliard's "With early horn" was singularly expressive. Mdlle. Irma Sethe and Mr. Henry Bird spiritedly played Brahms's Duo Sonata in A major (Op. 100), and the clever lady violinist subsequently gave with the utmost artistic feeling the Introduction and Adagio Religioso from Vieuxtemps's Concerto in D minor and other pieces.

Mr. Maurice Aubrey's Recital at Steinway Hall, on October 29, passed off successfully. This tenor has an exceedingly pleasing voice and a command of expression enabling him to do justice to pieces of which earnest sentiment is the prevailing characteristic. Though evidently suffering from nervousness, he sang with much delicacy and close observance of detail Raff's "Sérénade," Purcell's "I attempt from Love's sickness to fly," Schubert's "The Organ Player," and other airs. Miss Teresa Blamy sang some modern ballads effectively. Instrumental contributions were afforded by Miss Jessie Reeve (pianist) and Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncellist), the latter playing in his accustomed artistic manner. Mr. William A. Gardner ably accompanied. As reciter, the place of Mr. Charles Fry, absent through indisposition, was taken by Mr. Arthur Fayne, who, among other pieces, delivered Hood's "The Demon Ship" with a happy combination of humour and dramatic intensity.

Herr Michael Balling's series of Recitals in the Queen's (Small) Hall, to display the peculiar quality of tone of the Ritter viola-alta, attracted the attention of professional musicians. The instrument is not new to this country, the inventor having tried it at the Crystal Palace with Mr. Manns's orchestra a few years ago. The viola-alta is designed to obviate the nasal tone and other shortcomings of the ordinary viola, and is certainly more pleasing as a solo instrument, though increased size naturally makes it more difficult to hold. The properties of the instrument were exhibited to the best possible advantage by Herr Balling, a thorough artist, who handled it with ease; but supercession of the ordinary viola is very problematical, at least in this country. At the first Recital (October 28) Herr Balling played in excellent style, with Mr. Carl Weber, the pianist, Rubinstein's Duo Sonata in F minor (Op. 49) and some solos.

Mr. Alfred J. Dye gave an enjoyable and greatly appreciated evening Concert at Woodside Hall, North Finchley, on the 16th ult. It was virtually a "Grimson Family" Concert, for the members of that clever company were responsible for the whole programme except the songs, which were contributed by Madame Marie Hooton and Mr. Edward Branscombe. Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet opened the Concert and was finely played, while the Andante and Finale from Svendsen's String Octet brought the evening to an effective and exhilarating conclusion. Solos were contributed by Misses Annie, Jessie, and Amy Grimson, the last-named performing, with much success, a tasteful and taking Romance in D for violoncello, by Mr. Dye.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society celebrated its twenty-fifth season, on the 19th ult., by a Concert at the Queen's Hall, which was attended by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the Duke of Cambridge, and many eminent musicians. An important feature in the programme was a Concert-Overture, written for the occasion by Mr. George Mount; Goldmark's Overture to the "Cricket on the hearth" and some dances by Moszkowski were also given. Mr. Achille Rivarde was the solo violinist, and the vocalists were Madame Duma and Mr. Norman Salmond. A congratulatory telegram from the Queen was read during the interval.

The Bernhard Carrodus String Quartet, consisting of Messrs. B. M., R., and J. F. Carrodus, and Mr. W. Richardson (viola), gave their first Chamber Music Concert this season in the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 12th ult. Their talents, ripened by increased practice together, were combined in a Quartet in E flat by Mozart and in Schumann's work in A minor (Op. 41), each being played with spirit and character. Between these compositions came Grieg's Sonata (Op. 13) for pianoforte and violin, undertaken by Mrs. S. Passmore and Mr. B. M. Carrodus, and songs contributed by Miss Florence Hoskins, with Mr. Fountain Meen as accompanist.

Dr. Sawyer, who for the past thirteen years as conductor of the Brighton and Hove Choral Society has struggled so hard and with notable success against the apathy of the Brighton musical amateur, has been obliged, owing to more important duties, to resign his position. The Society has declined to exist without him, and will consequently be dissolved after the next Concert, which takes place in the present month, when Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ" will be performed. Dr. Sawyer has, however, generously promised to give his services in the formation of an Orchestral Society, which, it is to be hoped, will meet with more generous support.

Messrs. Delafosse and Ysaye gave their second Recital of pianoforte and violin music at St. James's Hall, on October 27. A beautiful performance may be recorded of Schumann's Sonata in D minor (Op. 121), one of the latest works of the unfortunate master; and both artists made their mark in Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, but the pianist made but little effect in his solos. Mr. Ysaye, however, in violin pieces by Rode and Vieuxtemps, not, perhaps, very well chosen, played with his customary vigour and expression, and will be heard again in London whenever he decides to revisit us.

Mrs. Varvill, at a Concert at St. James's Hall, on the 5th ult., for a benevolent object, was fortunate in obtaining the instrumental assistance of Fräulein Wietrowetz and Miss Margaret Wild, who, with good results, joined their abilities in a Sonata by Brahms for violin and pianoforte, and were also respectively heard in solos to which they did justice. Madame Marian McKenzie and Mr. David Bispham gave, with their accustomed success, songs thoroughly suited to them, and Mrs. Varvill exhibited taste in vocal pieces by Brahms, Schubert, and Korbay, the latter accompanying.

Miss Joan Hoefken gave her first Vocal and Instrumental Recital, at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 2nd ult., when she was assisted by Mr. Otto Milani and Mr. Herbert Parsons. The two last-named executants gave a meritorious performance of Saint-Saëns's Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte, and also played several solos on their respective instruments. Miss Hoefken sang a good selection of songs by Mozart, Beethoven, Handel, and Wagner with some success, but her singing is not as yet sufficiently finished to enable her to take a prominent place in London concert-rooms.

Mdlle. Josephine Kern and Herr Carl Grimm gave a Vocal and Pianoforte Recital on the 3rd ult., at Steinway Hall. The former sang a good selection of soprano songs with taste and refinement that testified to a musical temperament. Mr. Grimm is a young pianist of promise. His performance of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op. 57) had many meritorious features, and although somewhat cold in expression was intelligently phrased. The rendering of some pieces of less importance showed considerable executive command of the keyboard.

Mr. Luard Selby's claims to be considered a gifted and earnest composer were enforced at his Concert, at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 10th ult., when the most important works on the programme were from his pen. They included an excellent Quintet in A for pianoforte and strings, an effective Sonata in B for pianoforte and violin, and several songs of a melodious and refined character. The instrumentalists were the composer, Messrs. J. and W. Sutcliffe, A. Hobday, and A. Williams, and Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Kennerley Rumford were the vocalists.

Miss Leonora Jackson, a pupil of Professor Joachim, who conducted the Philharmonic Orchestra on the occasion, gave a Concert on October 17, at the Berlin Singakademie. The programme included Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, Brahms's Violin Concerto, and the Hungarian Fantasia by Ernst, in the execution of which the lady displayed great technical mastery and artistic feeling, and greatly pleased both her audience and the numerous critics present, by whom a brilliant future is predicted for the young English artist.

The Streatham Choral Society announces two Concerts, the first on the 21st inst., when Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Professor Stanford's new choral ballad "Phaudrig Crohoore" will be performed; and the second on May 3, 1897, when a new Mass in D, by Stewart Macpherson, the conductor of the Society, will, it is hoped, be given for the first time, with Mendelssohn's "Athalie," for which Mr. Charles Fry has been engaged to recite. A Lecture-Recital, by Mr. Macpherson, will also be given in March.

The Triennial Handel Festival will be held at the Crystal Palace next year on the following days: Grand Rehearsal, Friday, June 11; "Messiah," Monday, June 14; selections from sacred and secular works, Wednesday, June 16; "Israel in Egypt," Friday, June 18. The solo artists will be Madame Albani, Miss Ella Russell, Madame Clara Samuell, Madame Nordica, Madame Marian McKenzie, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Andrew Black.

An interesting selection of chamber music was admirably interpreted, on the 11th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, by Miss Llewela Davies and Mr. Frederic Griffith. The programme contained a Fantasie for flute and pianoforte by Max Meyer Olberleben, a melodious Sextet for pianoforte and wind by Ludwig Thuille, and Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses," the last-named being brilliantly rendered by Miss Davies. Mr. Lewis Thomas was the vocalist.

A commemoration of the long and most illustrious reign of Her Majesty the Queen will be held at the Crystal Palace next year. It will include a Victorian Loan Exhibition, national fêtes and celebrations, a magnificent historical pageant, and a course of lectures, demonstrating the progress made in science, art, letters, and industry in the Victorian era. Among these will be one on "Sixty Years of Music," to be given on April 28.

A short selection from the works of Mendelssohn was given at St. Bartholomew's, Camberwell, after Evensong, on the 8th ult., by members of the choir, the organist to the church, Mr. W. C. H. Darley, presiding at the organ. The vocalists were Messrs. Davis and Pryor and Master A. J. Badham. It is intended to continue this series of short Recitals on the second Sunday in each month.

Oratorios will be given at the Parish Church of St. John the Evangelist, Walworth Road, on the afternoon of the second Sunday in each month. Spohr's "Last Judgment" will be given on the 13th inst., "The Messiah" in January, "Elijah" in February, "St. Paul" in March, Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" in April, and on Good Friday, Mozart's "Requiem."

Mrs. Francis Ralph gave an agreeable Concert on the the 23rd ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The Concert-giver played several pianoforte solos with artistic perception and technical facility, and took part with Mr. Horace Ralph in a meritorious rendering of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata. Mr. Arthur Walenn was the vocalist.

Miss Agnes Walker gave a successful Vocal Recital, on the 12th ult., at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley. In addition to the much-appreciated singing by the Concert-giver, there appeared Mr. Cockell, Mr. Davis, and Miss F. Collingwood, the last-named contributing two violin solos. Mr. R. F. Tyler was the accompanist.

At the City of London College, White Street, Moorfields, on the 19th ult., Miss Edith Swepstone delivered an interesting Musical Lecture on Beethoven, in the course of which a number of selections from the master's pianoforte sonatas were performed.

The Governors of the Bishopsgate Foundation have appointed Mr. W. A. B. Russell conductor of the Musical Society which has been formed in connection with the Bishopsgate Institution.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society announces three Subscription Concerts (twelfth series), to be given in the Queen's Hall, on the 8th inst., February 9 and April 5, 1897.

On the 13th ult. the large stock of Messrs. Kirkman and Son's pianofortes was disposed of by auction, and that firm has now ceased to exist.

Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co. have just issued their most useful Professional Pocket Book and Diary for 1897.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Bergamo.—The committee charged with the organisation of the forthcoming Donizetti centenary celebrations have hit upon the somewhat unconventional idea of offering a prize of 2,000 lire for the most approved painting of a subject taken from one of the composer's operas. Minor prizes, consisting of medals and diplomas, are likewise to be awarded.

Berlin.—The third Philharmonic Concert of the season, on the 9th ult., under Herr Nikisch's direction, included two novelties—the "Scherzo capriccioso" for orchestra, by Dvorák, which pleased greatly, and a symphonic poem bearing the fanciful title, "What the flowers in the meadows tell me," by Herr Mahler, the Hamburg Capellmeister, a clever composition picturesquely instrumented. Madame Sembrich was the vocalist.——Carissimi's oratorio "Jephtha" was given by the Philharmonic Choir, under Herr Siegfried Ochs's direction, on the 16th ult. The beautiful work of the seventeenth century master, the "father of oratorio," had recently been revived also at Munich, where, as on the present occasion, it proved a perfect revelation to many amateurs. Another highly interesting performance was that of a remarkable Concerto in G major, by J. S. Bach, given by the Mozart-Verein, with the co-operation of Professor Joachim. It is written in ten parts for as many stringed instruments (three violins, three violas, three violoncellos, and a bass viol), the cembalo part having been elaborated by the conductor, Herr Aloys Schmitt.——One of the recent Organ Concerts of Dr. Reimann, at the Emperor William Memorial Church, which is always crowded on these occasions, included some of Brahms's "Serious Songs," and, ably sung as they were in what may be described as their appropriate surroundings, they deeply affected the hearers.——Herr Richard Strauss, of Munich, conducted the Concert of the Wagner-Verein, on the 2nd ult., which included some of his own compositions and a fine rendering of Wagner's "Faust" Overture, Frau Sucher being the vocalist in excerpts from "Tristan und Isolde."——At the instigation of the Emperor a complete performance of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" is to be given at the Royal Theatre early this month. The work is being rehearsed in conformity with the recent Bayreuth representations, and the leading artists engaged in the latter will take part.

Bonn.—The widow of Capellmeister Langenbach has placed some valuable house property, together with a sum of fifty thousand marks, at the disposal of the Municipality of Bonn for the purpose of establishing a Home for the widows of musicians, irrespective of nationality, who have professed their art in Germany.

Brussels.—The opening performance of the season of the Concerts Populaires was devoted exclusively to the works of M. Saint-Saëns, who conducted, and was almost overwhelmed with demonstrations of popular favour. In the programme were the Symphony in A minor, the "Suite Algerienne," and the Variations for two pianofortes on a theme by Beethoven. The first of M. Ysaye's Orchestral Concerts was announced to take place on the 29th ult., with M. Raoul Pugno as the executant of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A.——M. Vincent d'Indy is now here supervising the rehearsals of his new opera "Fervaal," the première of which at the De la Monnaie is looked forward to with considerable interest. Meanwhile performances of "Tannhäuser" have been given here, with the successful assumption by Mdlle. Kutscherra of the part of Venus, and, on the 16th ult., the première was announced of M. Massenet's new opera "Don César de Bazan."

Coburg.—The first performance took place, on the 1st ult., at the Hof-Theater, of an opera by Herr Johannes Doebber, entitled "The Smith of Gretna Green," the libretto by Herr Felix Dahn. The work was favourably received.

Cologne.—An Association has just been formed here by members of the Gurzenich Orchestra with the interesting object of giving during the winter a series of chamber concerts for brass instruments, when much-neglected works, such as Beethoven's Sestet (Op. 71) and Ottet (Op. 103), Mozart's Divertimento (No. 8), and Schubert's (unfinished) Ottet, are to obtain a hearing.

Copenhagen.—A Swedish contralto, Madame Matilda Linden, achieved an enormous success recently at the Royal Theatre, as Orpheus in Gluck's opera, and in other leading parts, her superb well-trained voice and magnificent stage presence combining to arouse the enthusiasm of the audience on each occasion.

Dessau.—The new season at the Hof-Theater opened in a highly promising way towards the end of October by the (uncurtailed) performance of the entire Nibelungen Tetralogy; an achievement the relatively small residential establishment may well be proud of, and which is mainly owing to the artistic zeal and energy of its conductor, Herr August Klughardt.——The Choral Society founded by the late eminent organist and composer, Friedrich Schneider, celebrated, on the 15th ult., its seventy-fifth anniversary.

Dresden.—Johann Strauss's new operetta "Waldmeister" was given, for the fiftieth time, on October 31, at the Residenz Theater, an altogether unprecedented "run" here for a work of this kind.

Düsseldorf.—One of the oldest living German musicians, Herr Leopold Alexander, completed, on the 4th ult., the sixtieth anniversary of his installation as a member of the orchestra here. The artist, now in his eighty-first year, made the acquaintance of Mendelssohn in 1831 while in London, who formed a high opinion of the young violinist's talent, and on his assuming, two years later, the Düsseldorf conductorship, Alexander followed him there and the acquaintance ripened into close friendship.

Frankfort-on-Main.—Frau Adelheid de Wette, to whom the world is indebted for the libretto to "Hansel and Gretel," has just published a fresh dramatised fairy story, "Der Froschkönig" ("King of Frogs"), for which the talented sister of Herr Humperdinck has, in this instance, herself written the music. It is to be first produced, at Christmastide, by the Cologne Stadt-Theater.

Freiburg.—The recent most successful début, at the Stadt-Theater, of Herr Ludwig Dingeldey in the part of the Vampire in Marschner's opera, derives special interest from the fact that the artist, one of the last pupils of Liszt, commenced his career very successfully as a pianist, and afterwards became an actor; not a bad preparation, by the way, for the lyric stage.

Hamburg. — Emil Hartmann's new one-act opera "Runenzauber" was brought out recently at the Stadt-Theater, and extremely well received, the composer being called for many times. The work has also been accepted for performance at Berlin, Dresden, Düsseldorf, and elsewhere. Ignaz Brühl's as yet unpublished three-act opera "Gloria" was also performed for the first time on the same occasion, achieving, however, little more than a succès d'estime.

Leipzig.—Madame Ada Adiny, of the Paris Opéra, appeared at the Stadt-Theater recently in the part of Isolde, which she sang in German for the first time on this occasion, and scored a full success, owing, in the first place, to her grand dramatic conception and realisation of the part, assisted by a commanding stage presence.——The long projected performance of Handel's oratorio "Deborah," in Dr. Chrysander's version, by the Riedel-Verein, took place at the Albert Hall, on October 18, before a crowded and enthusiastic audience. The solo parts were in good hands, and Dr. Kretzschmar conducted. "Hercules," likewise in the Chrysander edition, will be given in January.——The new popular Symphony Concerts, under Herr Nicodé's direction, have entered upon what promises to be a very successful first season.——Herr Teichmüller, an excellent resident pianist, has been appointed to a professorship of his instrument at the Conservatorium.

Lisbon.—Senhor de Freitas Brito, the musical director of the San Carlos Theatre, has accepted an invitation of the Brazilian Government to conduct a series of performances in Rio de Janeiro of the operatic works of the late Carlo Gomes, including his "Maria Tudor," which has not yet been produced in the composer's native country.

Madrid.—Señor Felipe Pedrell, the eminent Spanish music historian, has commenced a series of highly interesting Lectures at the Athenæum, embracing the three distinctive periods of musical development—viz., the homophonous, the polyphonous, and the harmonic and modern. Twenty-two lectures will be given in all.——At the Royal Theatre performances were resumed, on October 27, with the first production here of "Der fliegende Holländer." The great event of the season will be the first performance of "Die Walküre," now in preparation, and for which special studies have been made by the management at Bayreuth.

Mayence.—Fräulein Hedwig Materna, a niece of the well-known prima donna, made her début recently at the Stadt-Theater as Santuzza in the "Cavalleria Rusticana," with considerable success.

Munich.—As the result of the prize competition for an opera, initiated by the Prince Regent of Bavaria, none of the ninety-eight competing scores has been deemed worthy by the jury of the prize of six thousand marks offered. By way of a compromise, that sum has been divided equally amongst the composers of the three most nearly approximating works—viz., Herren Thuille, of Munich; Koennemann, of Ostrau; and Zemlinsky, of Vienna.——Kienzl's "Der Evangelimann" was performed for the first time at the Royal Theatre, on October 28, and, judging from the very favourable reception accorded it, is likely to maintain itself in the répertoire for some time to come.

Naples.—The San Carlo Theatre, which has been in a somewhat unsettled condition for some time past, has been placed in the hands of the experienced impresario Musella, and will re-open for the carnival season, when Verdi's "Falstaff," Franchetti's "Pourceaugnac," and Giordano's "Andrea Chénier" will be in the repertory. At the Mercadante Theatre a new three-act opera, "La Collana di Pasqua," the libretto by Signor Illica, the music by Signor Luporini, has been brought out with sufficiently pronounced success to induce the immediate acceptance of the work by the Dal Verme Theatre, in Milan.

New York. — The German "Liederkranz," at its recent general meeting, decided to signalise the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, next year, by an extensive Concert tour throughout Germany and Austria, when the receipts of each Concert are to be devoted to the charitable funds of the town in which it is held.——Both Mascagni and Leoncavallo, the Artist's Journal informs us, are likely to visit America next year for the first time. An enterprising manager is engaged in organising separate orchestras for an extensive tour in the States, when the two representatives of "young Italy" will conduct their own compositions.

Recanati.—Mascagni has agreed to write a Symphonic poem, to be performed under his direction, in connection with the centenary celebrations next year of the poet Giacomo Leopardi.

Stockholm.—The Café-Concert, euphoniously called "Tingel Tangel" in Continental parts—a vile species of the genus "music hall"—is about to be abolished altogether, by order of the Government, throughout the land of Sweden. Instead thereof, behold (in the mind's eye, Horatio!) springing up in every town new popular concert institutions, crowded with the erstwhile tingel tangel frequenters, eagerly listening to the music of the classics. Such, at all events, is the project of a paternal Government to which, though reluctantly sceptical, we heartily wish every success.

Trieste.—Considerable success attended the performance, on October 23, by the Società Philharmonico-dramatica, and again, on October 27, at the Fenice Theatre, of a two-act comic opera, "La Pupilla," a new operatic version, by Carlo Goldoni, of Beaumarchais's "Le Barbier de Seville." The composer is Signor Gialdino Gialdini, the conductor of the Society, and a musician, as this work proves, of more than average merit, the subject being treated with spirit and originality, albeit somewhat overweighted in the orchestration.

Utrecht.—Mdlle. Cornélie van Osterzee, the talented Dutch composer, at a Concert given here recently, introduced, under her personal direction, a new orchestral work, "Idylls of the King," a series of symphonic tone-pictures founded upon Tennyson's epic cycle, which was hailed with delight by the audience and highly appreciated by the press. Two numbers of the series have been accepted by Herr Nikisch for performance at the Philharmonic Concerts in Berlin, where the lady has made her musical studies.

Vienna.—Jenö Hubay's three-act opera "Der Dorflump" ("The village vagabond") was brought out at the Theater-an-der-Wien, on October 29, and fairly well received. The work is essentially Hungarian in character, the composer making use of the national element to a degree which precludes it from being fully appreciated by non-Hungarian hearers. The Philharmonic Society's Concerts, under Dr. Hans Richter's conductorship, were resumed on the 8th ult. Amongst first performances here during the season will be an overture to the opera "Prince Igor," by Borodine, Dvorák's three symphonic poems, illustrative of Czech folk stories, and Richard Strauss's "Zarathustra." Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, last produced here in 1888, was included in the programme of the opening Concert, and the reception accorded to it by the audience amounted to an ovation rendered to the genius of its departed composer.

OBITUARY.

We have to record the death, on the 1st ult., at Delft, of Joseph Karel Boers, the doyen of Netherlandish composers and one of the most notable contemporary musicians, as he was also one of the most modest. He was born at Nymwegen in 1812, and studied at the Royal Conservatoire in The Hague, under Lubeck, being afterwards appointed conductor at the Royal Theatre in that capital. He subsequently filled similar appointments in Paris and in Metz, and in 1841 obtained the post of Professor at the Ecole Normale and conductor of the Choral Society at Nymwegen. In 1853 he was appointed "musik-director" at Delft, where he finally settled. Boers, whose erudition was considerable, has published a valuable "History of musical instruments in the Middle Ages" and a complete bibliography of musical works, ancient and modern, produced in the Netherlands.

Australian papers announce the death, on October 5, at Adelaide, of A. Wyatt Mortimer, organist, one of the best known and most highly respected members of the local musical profession. He was born in London in 1856, and began his musical career as a choirboy at St. Michael's, Handsworth, Birmingham, where at an early age he filled the post of assistant-organist and conductor. He afterwards continued his studies at the Stuttgart Conservatorium under Dr. Faisst and Dr. Prückner, the Court pianist. On his return to England Mr. Mortimer held several important appointments, the last of these being that of organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Preston, which he resigned some ten years ago to join friends in Australia. For the last seven years he has been the highly esteemed organist of the Port Congregational Church, Adelaide. He was instrumental in forming the Port Adelaide Musical Society, conducted the Orpheus Society, and presided at the organ at oratorio festivals in connection with several concert companies which have visited Adelaide within the last few years.

In Alfred Stubbs Baker, whose death, on October 13, at Princeton, we briefly announced in our last number, the city of New York has lost one of its most able and accomplished organists. He was the son of the Rev. Alfred B. Baker, rector of Trinity Church, Princeton, and graduated with honours at Princeton College. His first appointment was at St. Peter's, Morristown (N.J.), where he remained for several years, bringing the choir to a high state of efficiency. Upon his uncle, Mr. G. Edward Stubbs, resigning the organistship of St. James's Church, New York, to accept that of St. Agnes' Chapel, Mr. Baker was selected as his successor, and he occupied the position until his premature death at the age of twenty-eight. The deceased was a brilliant performer on the organ and a composer of great promise, his compositions including a Te Deum, a Communion Service with orchestral accompaniment, and several anthems. During last winter he directed a series of Symphony Concerts in Princeton, and there is little doubt that, had he lived, he would have been offered the professorship of music at the Princeton College, which this year celebrates the 150th anniversary of its foundation.

The death, at the age of sixty-one, is announced, at St. Kilda (Melbourne), of Madame Fannie Simonsen, for many years the leading prima donna of the Australian lyrical stage, the mother of Madame Francis Saville, who has been engaged by Mr. Maurice Grau for the next opera season at Covent Garden. Madame Simonsen's operatic career, extending over twenty years, was one of unabated success, and she shone equally in serious and comic opera.

On the 22nd ult., at the Villa Vigatto, near Parma, Italo Campanini, the eminent operatic tenor. He was born at Parma in 1845, and made his début at Odessa, in "Il Trovatore," in 1869. He then withdrew for a time to study further, and made his rentrée as Lohengrin, at Florence, in 1871. His first appearance at Drury Lane was in 1872, under Mapleson, and he subsequently became one of the most noted operatic tenors. In 1883 he took up his residence in the United States, visiting Europe from time to time.

The once celebrated tenor, Miecislav de Kaminski, died on October 20, at Lemberg, at the age of seventy. For a period of thirty years he was one of the most popular singers on the German lyrical stage, and a great favourite with the late King Louis of Bavaria. In 1864 the deceased was associated with Madame Patti in the Concert given at Frankfort, during the congress of German sovereigns, under the presidency of the Emperor of Austria. Kaminski, who was of Polish nationality, occupied for many years past the post of stage manager at the Lemberg Opera.

Francesco Roncogli, distinguished organist and composer, died at Bologna on October 15, aged eighty-five. He occupied for many years the position of organist of the churches of San Petronio and of San Pietro, in Bologna, and was the president of the famous Academia Filarmonica of that city. As a composer of church music, his works are distinguished by purity of form and elevation of style.

Alexander Durlacher died at his residence in Burlington Street, on the 19th ult., aged seventy-five. He was for many years, and up to the time of its final dissolution, a member of committee and one of the trustees of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and also rendered valuable service in the organisation of the Handel Festival Choir. He moreover took an active part in the management of choral performances in State Concerts at Buckingham Palace.

William Grist, for many years connected with the Crystal Palace Company, and latterly with Messrs. C. T. Brock and Co., died on the 19th ult., at the age of fifty-six. Mr. Grist was well-known in both dramatic and musical circles, and was the author of several original and well-known cantatas.

We have also to record the following deaths :—

On October 8, at Detroit (Mich.), the Rev. John Friedland, priest, and director of the choir of St. Joseph's, a zealous promoter of Catholic Church music in America, aged sixty-three.

On October 13, at St. Louis, Minnesota, P. G. Anton, composer, proprietor of a pianoforte factory, aged sixty-four.

On October 17, at Berlin, Theodor Stieber, esteemed pianist and teacher, aged seventy-five.

On October 18, at Amsterdam, Bernhardt van der Eijken, excellent pianist, aged fifty-eight.

On October 19, at Hasselt (Belgium), Gérard Remouchamps, vocalist, violinist, and virtuoso on the tuba, aged fifty-one.

On October 25, at Milan, Eugenio Mazzucchelli, distinguished pianist and organist, and able composer, aged fifty-six.

On October 26, at Ried, Carl Reppl, noted organ-builder (one of whose instruments, at Attersee, was a favourite with Anton Bruckner), aged sixty.

On October 31, at Monza, Gaetano Archinti, for many years scenic director at the theatre La Scala, Milan, aged sixty-three.

On the 3rd ult., at Vienna, Eduard Lucan, principal of the Horak'sche Musikschule, aged fifty-one.

On the 5th ult., at Hull, Joseph King Andrews, of the firm of Forster and Andrews, organ-builders, Hull, aged seventy-six.

On the 7th ult., at Brussels, Joseph Cras, curé of Notre Dame du Sablon, accomplished musician and an authority on the music of the Catholic ritual.

On the 10th ult., at Peckham, Frank Swinford, tenor vocalist.

On the 21st ult., Charles Conyers, the well known tenor singer, from typhoid fever.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Auckland (New Zealand).—The first Concert of the recently formed "Ladies' Liederkranz," which took place on August 27, in the Opera House, proved most successful. Ninety-five members were present, and under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Towsey effectively rendered the following part-songs: "O welcome night" (Abt), chorus of handmaidens from "Fridolin" (Randegger), "Bright is the Day," from "Hereward" (Prout), and the chorus of houris from Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri." Vocal solos were sung by Mrs. F. Stewart, Miss E. Farrell,

Mrs. Alexander, and Mr. Reid; a duet by the Misses R. Tole and M. White, and a trio by the Misses Wheeler, Harper, and Jarvis. Instrumental pieces were contributed by Miss G. Tatley, M. Willimoff, and Messrs. Innes, Paque, and Towsey.

Durban (South Africa).—The Musical Association successfully performed Cellier's opera "Dorothy" as a Concert Recital in the Town Hall. The chorus and orchestra numbered about 150, and the soloists were Mrs. McBride, Mrs. F. Stevens, Miss Walton, Messrs. Phillips, Nicholson, Siedle, Child, and G. C. Macfarlane. Mr. R. H. Macdonald conducted.

Epping.—On the 18th ult. a Lecture, "An Evening with the Great Composers," was given by Mr. Henry Riding, in the Church Room. Vocal and instrumental illustrations were rendered by members of the Loughton and Epping Choral Societies.

Falmouth.—The Philharmonic Society gave a successful performance of Handel's "Samson," on the 4th ult., in the Drill Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. J. G. Patey. The solos were sung by Miss Kate Collings, Mrs. Fanshawe, Mr. W. Higley, and Mr. C. W. Chard, and the choruses were well rendered by about 130 voices. Mr. T. Holmes was principal violin of a small orchestra, and assistance was given at the pianoforte by Mrs. Stephens.

Grahamstown (Cape Colony).—Mr. Theophil Wendt, a clever young musician from the Royal Academy of Music, London, is doing excellent work in the cause of music here. An admirable Concert was given by him in the Town Hall, on September 15, when he played a number of pianoforte solos by Chopin, Liszt, and Grieg, and was ably assisted by Mr. Percy Ould (violinist) and Miss Minnie Taylor (vocalist).

Halifax.—An effective performance of "Elijah" was given, on the 12th ult., by the choral society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Garland. The soloists were Miss Palliser, Madame Dews, Madame Robertshaw, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Andrew Black; able assistance being also rendered in the concerted pieces by Miss Gertrude Crossley, Mr. W. Shaw, and Mr. A. Greenwood.

Hanley.—For the Meakin Concert, on the 16th ult., Mr. Barlow had secured a first-class party, including Madame Belle Cole, Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Swale, Mr. John Dunn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. David Hughes. Once more the crowded audience evinced the utmost interest in the programme, and the performance was a great success. Mayor's Sunday, on the 15th ult., afforded an excellent opportunity for an indication of the ability of church choirs. Burslem's Mayor visited the Wesleyan Church (Mr. F. J. Dean, choirmaster); Hanley Presbyterian (Mr. J. A. MacGregor) received Mr. Tunnicliffe (Mayor), while Stoke and Newcastle provided special musical services.

Holmfirth.—The district choral society gave, on October 28, meritorious performances in the Drill Hall of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and "As the hart pants." The soloists were Madame J. Sadler, Mrs. T. A. Booth, and Messrs. T. H. Brearley, Riley, A. H. Butterworth, and J. H. Roberts. The works were accompanied by a small orchestra under the conductorship of Mr. J. E. Ibeson.

Leicester.—A pleasing ceremony took place at the Town Hall, on October 28, when the Mayor presented a portrait in oils and a purse of £300 to Miss M. A. Deacon, in recognition of the services she had rendered to the progress of music in the neighbourhood during the last fifty years. There was a large and representative assemblage, and Miss Deacon, in returning thanks, requested the Mayor to invest the £300 in his name and those of other mentioned gentlemen, and to apply the interest annually for ever to a prize for pianoforte playing and singing alternately, to be called the Deacon Prize, and to be competed for by boys and girls resident in Leeds, whose ages do not exceed fifteen years.

Maidstone.—An effective performance of "The Messiah" was given, under the able direction of Mr. F. W. Dutnall, on the 4th ult., at the Corn Exchange. The soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Miss M. Clark, Mr. W. Clinch, and Mr. M. Tufnail, and the accompaniments were meritoriously played by an amateur orchestra.

Malvern (Victoria, Australia).—Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung at St. George's Church, on October 8, by the choir, assisted by the choral society and an orchestra of twenty performers, with Mr. S. A. Ralph as principal. Mrs. J. J. Wilson, Miss Newson, and Mr. T. P. Clarke were the soloists, Mr. H. T. Inge presided at the organ, and Mr. T. Hasler conducted. The Symphony was very well played by the small but efficient orchestra, and the large chorus gave a good account of itself in the choral portions of the work. After the benediction Mendelssohn's "War march of the Priests" was played as the choir left the stalls. Much interest was centred in this performance, as it was the first occasion on which an orchestra had been employed in the parish church.

Sidcup, Kent.—A Musical Service was held in the Congregational Church on October 25. Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" was well rendered, the solo being taken by Miss Robjohns. Mr. E. Harris sang with much expression "If with all your hearts" ("Elijah") and Mr. H. Osborne delivered the air from "St. Paul," "O God, have mercy," with excellent effect. The service, which comprised violin and organ solos, concluded with Spohr's "God, Thou art great," the soloists in which were Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Noble, Mr. E. Harris, and Mr. H. Osborne. The service was under the direction of Mr. C. R. Noble, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Southsea.—Miss Miles gave an attractive Concert, on the 3rd ult., at the Salisbury Hall. Miss Obbard sang with pronounced success, and the Concert-giver was also ably assisted by Miss Greenleaf, Miss Treeby, Mrs. Ancell, and Mr. Street.

Tottenham.—The annual Concert for the elementary schools of Stamford Hill was given on the 19th ult. at the Forster Hall. The artists included the Stella Glee Singers, Miss Gertrude Matry, Signor Caprile, Mr. A. Flood, Mr. Frederick Sire, Miss Kuhler, and Professor Volanti Armitage, solo pianist.

Wellington (New Zealand).—An enjoyable Organ Recital was given by Mr. W. A. Reid, in the private church of St. Luke's, on September 11. The programme was as follows: "Calm and Storm" (J. H. Lewis), Andante (Hoyte), Intermezzo (Mascagni), Trumpet March (W. H. Jude), Second Offertoire (Hewlett), Concerto (Handel), Fantasia (W. T. Best), "March of the Men of Harlech" (ancient Welsh March, arranged for the organ by W. A. Reid). The choir rendered two anthems very acceptably, and Miss Stirling sang with good taste and feeling "The Better Land" (Jude).

Woodford.—Mr. W. B. Burnett Carter gave his first Violin Recital, in the George Lane Lecture Hall, on the 12th ult. He played with marked ability Grieg's Sonata in F (with Miss Kate Kimbell), Bach's Fugue in G minor for violin alone, Saint-Saëns's Concerto in B minor, and other selections. Mr. H. Lane Wilson contributed some well rendered songs.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. J. Charles Long, Organist and Choirmaster to Christ Church, Cheltenham.—Mr. Claude Townley, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Stephen's Church, Cheltenham.—Mr. Frederick Meen, to Park Church, Highbury.—Mr. A. IN REMEMBRANCE OF PAST WORSHIPPERS

BY THE

REV. W. H. DRAPER.

A HYMN

USED AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS, 1896, AND SUITABLE FOR DEDICATION FESTIVALS, CHURCH FESTIVALS, &c.

In our day of thanksgiving one psalm let us offer,
For the Saints who before us have found their reward;
p When the cords of our love broke asunder, we sorrowed,
m But now we rejoice that they rest in the Lord.

In the morning of life, and at noon, and at even,
He called them away from our worship below;
cr But not till His love, at the Font and the Altar,
Had girt them with grace for the way they should go.

These stones that have echoed their praises are holy,
And dear is the ground where their feet have once trod;
Yet here they confessed they were strangers and pilgrims,
And still they were seeking the City of God.

Sing praise, then, for all who here sought and here found Him,
Whose journey is ended, whose perils are past;
cr They believed in the Light; and its glory is round them,
f Where the clouds of earth's sorrow are lifted at last. Amen.

Price Twopence. Set to BARNBY'S Tune, No. 29*.

THE VICTORIAN AGE

A CANTATA

BY

F. E. WEATHERLY & J. L. ROECKEL.

Mr. Henry F. Frost, writing in the Music Trades Review, says:

"Mr. Weatherly's verses are partly courtier-like, partly radical, and wholly patriotic. The composer is chiefly known by his pleasing ballads, but he shows in this work that he can write stirring vigorous music, as well as sentimental. On paper the cantata looks really very effective, and it will probably be taken up."

The Queen says:

"Mr. Weatherly has contrived to touch a great many topics with a light hand, and to compress them within moderate limits, and Mr. Roeckel has set the twelve numbers of which the cantata consists to music which is always elegant and artistic, and occasionally—as in the chorus 'Fell ye the lofty pine and oak'—broad and massive. The composition is written for solo soprano, contralto, and baritone, and chorus; and it includes a Processional March of much gaiety and animation."

Prices: Staff Notation, Pianoforte Score, 2s.; Tonic Sol-fa, Vocal Score, 9d.; Words, 1d.; Orchestral Parts on hire.

THE TIMES.

A special attraction of the concert was the first performance, under the composer's direction, of a new Suite of "Four English Dances," by Mr. F. H. Cowen, a work no less effective and graceful than the Suite given last week at the Philharmonic. The opening movement, a "Stately Dance," is exceedingly characteristic and original; the second, a "Rustic Dance," has, among prominent parts for wood-wind instruments, a delightful flourish for oboe; the succeeding "Graceful Dance," though a good deal like several other compositions of Mr. Cowen, prepares well for the final "Country Dance," a most attractive measure.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These pieces, written for the most part "in the old style," are agreeable examples of a composer who is never at fault when he sets himself to charm by simple and graceful means. Orchestral societies desiring to cultivate works that are not too heavily strewn with stumbling-blocks cannot do better than make the acquaintance of this pleasing little Suite.

STANDARD.

A feature of the evening was the first performance of Four English Dances, written for orchestra by Mr. F. H. Cowen. These are respectively named "Stately Dance," "Rustic Dance," "Graceful Dance," and "Country Dance," names which well describe their several characters. As may be imagined, they are all scored in a most picturesque manner. They were excellently played under the direction of the composer, and the double recall he received to the platform testified to the pleasure his work had afforded the audience.

DAILY NEWS.

These brief, but highly effective, pieces avowedly imitate the old style, and they are entitled respectively a "stately" dance, a "rustic" dance—very quaint and pretty, and not without its traces of humour—a graceful, and a country dance. The composer, who conducted, was recalled to the platform, and his new Suite will beyond much question be heard of again.

MORNING POST.

Additional interest was imparted to the programme by its inclusion of "Four English Dances" for orchestra, by Mr. F. H. Cowen, which were heard on this occasion for the first time. These are attractive imitations of the forms in which our forefathers took delight. They are all most effectively scored, and are of that graceful and refined character which is expected in works by this gifted writer. They were warmly received, and doubtless will be often heard at the concerts of amateur orchestral societies, for which they are very suitable.

GLOBE.

An orchestral concert, under Mr. Cowen, was given last night at the St. James's Hall. Four charming English Dances in the old style, by Mr. Cowen, were performed for the first time, and achieved an undoubted success.

ADVENT CANTATA.

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

The Words selected from Holy Scripture

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

THE TIMES.

This last work, which, since it is quite new, may be dealt with first, came almost as an agreeable surprise to those who have an acquaintance with what passes nowadays for "Church music"—that is, music largely composed of inane sentimentality and triteness. Nowhere in Mr. Blair's work is there any trace of the former vice, and only in the supplementary final chorus, intended to be sung when the work is performed in the concert-room, is there anything approaching to the commonplace. . . . Mr. Blair may deservedly be congratulated upon a composition of undeniable merit, which no doubt will frequently be heard in "quires and places where they sing."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This work, constructed on the old German model, is laid out for soprano solo and chorus, with hymns to be sung by the congregation. . . . The cantata will increase the respect in which Mr. Blair is held as a musician, and, let us hope, encourage the composer to aim yet higher on another occasion.

STANDARD.

The music is purely devotional in feeling—that is to say, in the chaste style of English Church composers. . . . Hymns are included, to be sung by the choir and congregation when the cantata is given in a church, but it is intimated that they may be excised in a concert-room performance. Mr. Hugh Blair has made an agreeable addition to service music in this unpretentious but musicianly work.

DAILY NEWS.

The music is for the most part in the English Church style, but the two solos—one a devotional air, "Sorrow not for those that sleep," and the other, a shorter solo with chorus—indicate that Mr. Blair has an abundant gift of melody; while his choral writing, though by no means abstruse or difficult for ordinary choirs, is undeniably effective. The appendix, intended for concert use, is partly fugal, and it is, perhaps, the best section of a wholly creditable piece of musical workmanship.

MORNING POST.

It is an eminently sound and musicianly work, expressive to no small degree within the limits the composer has sternly imposed on himself, and likely to be often used in the Church, for which it is destined. . . . Mr. Blair should prove a valuable recruit to Church music. He writes with sympathy for the voice both in solos and in choruses, and his scholarship is not obtrusive.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

No amateur association need be afraid that Mr. Blair has studded his composition with difficulties, because he happens to be a cathedral organist, and is versed in the production of older writers for the Church. . . . Mr. Blair's Advent cantata, by reason of its directness, conciseness, and generally-pleasing qualities, bids fair to be widely adopted by church choirs needing serviceable additions to their répertoire.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

This brief and unpretending work, designed specially for the season of Advent, comprises only six numbers, and occupies barely half-an-hour in performance. It serves, however, to exhibit the taste and scholarship of the composer in an extremely favourable light. The scoring is neat and effective, and the vocal writing, especially in the choral portions, uniformly graceful in character. There is, moreover, an element of sentiment about this little work which lifts it above the level of an academic exercise. Mr. Blair is not afraid to be simple, and yet he never deviates into downright platitudes.

ATHENÆUM.

A devotional and expressive little work, written for soprano solo and chorus, unpretentious, but by no means ineffective.

SCENES FROM THE SAGA OF

KING OLAF

BY

H. W. LONGFELLOW & H. A. ACKWORTH, C.I.E.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

Soprano, Tenor and Bass Soli, Chorus and Orchestra

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 30.)

Price Three Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition (Choruses only), One Shilling and Sixpence.
Vocal Parts, in the Press.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Elgar knows how to write effectively, both for vocal solo and chorus, and, as a matter of fact, he shows a peculiar sensitiveness to the effects which can be produced by such means. This is, perhaps, the most important revelation made by the new work, because found in connection with a rare gift of writing for the orchestra. . . . To sum up a necessarily hurried judgment, "King Olaf" is a work of high importance, one which should turn expectant eyes upon its composer as a musician within whose reach, apparently, lies no common distinction. . . . Almost every number was applauded fervently, and, at the close, composer, soloists, band, and choir were privileged to divide amongst them the honours of an enthusiastic demonstration.

STANDARD.

Mr. Elgar has not only dealt with his subject in an extraordinarily spirited manner, but has written music full of energy, melodic beauty, and modern feeling in methods and general construction. . . . The music flows on with delightful freedom from laboriousness, the part-writing, both for voices and orchestra, is luminous, though certainly not easy, and if Mr. Elgar knows his Wagner, which unquestionably he does, there is no suspicion of plagiarism.

DAILY NEWS.

The choruses are, as a rule, very effectively written, particularly that devoted to the challenge of the god Thor, the two choral ballads, and the chorus in which the death of Olaf is described. The tenor solo descriptive of Olaf's return and two duets for soprano and tenor are also amongst the more important numbers. Mr. Elgar himself conducted the cantata, which had a splendid reception. . . . When the final chorus had been sung the audience, choir, and band simultaneously burst into enthusiastic applause and continued cheering loudly after the composer had left the platform.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

I have no hesitation in pronouncing it the most notable addition to native productions the year has hitherto afforded. . . . Mr. Elgar throughout his latest work makes considerable use of representative themes. He knows their value, and happily in his hands they are not dangerous tools. The ingenuity with which he employs them is remarkable, and as the majority are simple and well defined they are readily recognisable at any stage of the story. Great reliance is placed upon the orchestra for the expression of ideas growing out of the dramatic situation, the instrumentation being always vivid and bold in colouring. Of the grateful nature of the work for the chorus I have already spoken. To sum up, "King Olaf" is a work deserving another hearing as soon as possible. It is distinguished by the best qualities of modern workmanship, and satisfies the understanding as completely as it pleases the ear.

ATHENÆUM.

The writing is from first to last luminous in design, picturesque in the orchestral colouring, and extremely felicitous as regards the vocal parts for soli and chorus. The principal motives are dealt with in the most musicianly spirit, and the whole is fresh and forcible, not a suspicion of labour being apparent.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JANUARY 1, 1896.

1896.

When the scared mariners by Paxos' coast
Heard, in the lull, the lamentable cry
Proclaiming Pan was dead, did they deny
Or disbelieve the news that all was lost?
No! though had vanished all they valued most,
They boldly steered beneath the midnight sky,
And followed, with a flowing sheet, where high
The Star of Bethlehem o'errode the host
Of spangled heaven; and there, behold! they found
A brighter God, who, in the straw, unfurled
A more transcendant banner, and was crowned
Thenceforth to be the Sovereign of the world!
But if another midnight voice should mar,
Where shall we find another guiding star!

Thinking, as the peace and joy of Christmas had just began to dawn, how I should fill this first page of a new volume, Philip Acton's sonnet, "The Star of Bethlehem," came to mind, and gave me a text. What can be more natural, during the brief space between the consummated labours of one year and the first toil of another, than an attempt to take a larger view of surrounding things—to rise above the petty details of common life, and obtain, if haply that may be, some more or less comprehensive idea of the "tide in the affairs of men" upon which we are all drifting? Even in doing this—such is the influence of the season—one goes back to the tale of the Nativity, as to a point from which it is possible to set out with a cheerful spirit. The story of Bethlehem is yet full of comfort and joy. With it in mind, the portentous cry, "Great Pan is dead," ringing over the Ionian sea, loses its terror. We know of the "brighter God" and the "transcendant banner," which mean a higher ideal and a nobler warfare.

At some time and in some way we are all sailing near the Echinades, and hearing the supernatural voice. The thoughtful among us must surely feel that such is our case at the present moment, when signs and symbols long reverenced are becoming meaningless; when new rules in life and art are made, every man being his own law-giver; when the whole camp ascends Mount Sinai and returns each with a special Decalogue, though not each with a nimbus. Pan is dead; authority has become contemptible, and the current of affairs runs towards chaos. Such appears to be the prospect seen by men who can turn their eyes from passing trifles; exciting in them the feeling whence springs the restlessness of our age; the note of pain that runs through its utterances; the forebodings that have given rise to a cult, and thrown dark shadows across the world. But we need not despair. The Star of Bethlehem is in the sky, though lingering clouds may hide its radiance. Thus it has been in all crises of the world; thus it ever will be, unless a mutinous hand grasp the helm of the universe and God be deposed.

Under these circumstances, how stands our well-loved art of music? A change is undoubtedly passing over it. It appears to be no longer under authority, but drifting with the currents of the hour. The cry is not, "Who will show us any good?" but, "Who will show us anything new and strange?" The newer and the stranger that which comes in response, the warmer its welcome. "But," says a great observer and student, "whenever the desire of change becomes principal; whenever we care only for new tunes, and new pictures and new scenes, all power of enjoying Nature or Art is so far perished from us, and a child's love of toys has taken its place. The continual advertisement of new music (as if novelty were its virtue) signifies, in the inner fact of it, that no one now cares for music. The continual desire for new exhibitions means that we do not care for pictures; the continual demand for new books means that nobody cares to read." These parodoxes are not so paradoxical as they seem. I refuse to believe, nevertheless, in ground for real alarm. Even for music there is a "brighter God," who will manifest himself at the right moment, and reduce disorder to the ordered freedom in which men best live.

Animated by this feeling, let us enter upon the New Year in hope and a reasonable confidence. Waiters upon Providence all of us must needs be to some extent, but each one can do something to influence the course of affairs, and especially may we be able, in a measure, to teach the doctrine of true liberty as distinct from that which is false. "There are liberties and liberties," says one of our teachers. "Yonder torrent, crystal-clear and arrow-swift, with its spray leaping into the air like white troops of fawns, is free, I think. Lost yonder, amidst bankless, boundless marsh—soaking in slow shallowness, as it will, hither and thither, listless, among the poisonous reeds and unresisting slime—it is free also. You may choose which liberty you will." On this the first day of a New Year, can we doubt where the choice should fall?

Joseph Bennett.

FOREIGN INFLUENCE ON HENRY PURCELL.

That the typical English musician of the past, the man in whom we have best right to glory, should not have scorned to profit by the best Continental music of his time, such as it was, may surely serve as a lesson to those who, not content with resenting the intrusion of foreign performers, affect to despise Continental centres of musical education, and use all their energies in the attempt to copy the sterilizing Chauvinism of Parisian or Berlinese musicians. There are a few aspects of Purcell's artistic career that have not been touched upon in any of the numerous articles on him that were suggested by the festival of November. I do not intend to discuss in minute detail the exact amount of the influence which the French masters first, and the Italians afterwards, exerted on our great composer; but one or two interesting points have lately come under my notice which I think are not unworthy to be recorded in connection with the recent celebration. Apparently Purcell's first models were the Englishmen of the time before the wars, and his instrumental fantasias and more than one of his anthems show that he had assimilated to a great extent the work of Orlando Gibbons and the great Elizabethans. The French influences under which he came, shortly after the return of Pelham Humfrey from Paris full of swaggering admiration for the French and conceited contempt for all things English, had their full effect upon the young man—certainly for a few years—until he had fully grasped the ways of working that were then in vogue with the Frenchmen, and had given practical proof, in many of his theatrical songs, of his ability to cast his ideas in a French mould. It is not generally known that any French influence remained with him after the famous conversion to Italian methods in or about 1682. But a piece of evidence recently brought to light shows that he never quite forgot what he learnt in early life. Mr. R. A. Streatfeild has found in the score of Lulli's "Isis," engraved 1677, the year the opera was produced, a "Chœur de Peuples des Climats glacés," in the first scene of Act IV., which is a curious anticipation of that famous "Frost Scene" in "King Arthur," where the shiverings of the Cold Genius and the chorus are represented by groups of tied quavers with a waved line above them, indicating a tremolo effect in the voice parts. In Lulli's chorus precisely the same effect is indicated, the words being set, in a rhythm where plain crotchets would have naturally been used, to pairs of quavers tied together, without the wavy line, it is true, but with the slurs clearly marked; and it is worth mention that the ties alone, without the wavy line, appear in the "Orpheus Britannicus" version of the "Frost Scene." As the refrain of the two stanzas sung by the chorus is "La neige et les glaçons nous donnent de mortels frissons," it is pretty clear that a strictly parallel effect is intended, and it is surely fair to assume that the effect occurred to Purcell in writing his "Frost Scene" as worthy of imitation. Purcell in all departments of his work was so thoroughly original a composer that he can well afford to yield this single effect to his French predecessor, and the actual music has little in common, Purcell's being, I need hardly say, far the grander of the two.

Concerning his conversion to the Italian style of writing, I have two small pieces of evidence to add to the stock already known. In a vague and general way, his biographers have repeated the name of Carissimi as being one of his favourite models. That composer is known to have been much admired by Charles II., whose praise of some duet of his provoked Blow to the composition of his famous "Go, perjured man"; and, indeed, the form of duet, as handled by Carissimi, was deserving of all imitation. I can show, I think, that Purcell felt Carissimi's power in this special department of composition, for among a set of hymns, anthems, &c., now in the Royal College of Music (No. 1,789 in the catalogue of the Sacred Harmonic Society's Library), in a MS., said to have been transcribed by Dr. Philip Hayes from MSS. by Purcell, now in the Royal Library at Buckingham Palace, I lately found the entry "Crucior in hac flamma. Hymn for two voices." I remembered the words as occurring, also in duet form, in an autograph MS. of Carissimi's in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge; and on comparison of the two compositions they proved to be identical, there being no sort of doubt of the genuineness of the Cambridge autograph. And in many of the dialogues printed in Playford's "Harmonia Sacra," most notably in the wonderful trio, "Saul and the Witch of Endor," Carissimi's way of treating the voices and the whole style of his writing are evidently intentionally copied by the English master.

The place where the most authentic record occurs of Purcell's change of front from admiration of the French music to that of the Italians, is, as we all know, the preface to the "Sonatas of Three Parts," published 1683. I need only quote one sentence, the best known passage of the preface: "For its Author, he has faithfully endeavour'd a just imitation of the most fam'd Italian Masters; principally, to bring the Seriousness and gravity of that sort of Musick into vogue, and reputation among our Country-men, whose humor, 'tis time now, should begin to loath the levity and balladry of our neighbours."

Of course the French are meant by these last words; but what exact model among Italian works was imitated by Purcell in these Sonatas it is not easy to decide. When editing them for the Purcell Society, I examined the chamber music of all the composers who are generally supposed to have been the Englishman's models, and I found that while the only work of Bassani's (the composer to whom the chief honour is usually assigned) that can have been accessible to Purcell at the time of his writing was a mere loose assemblage of suite movements, the "Sonate a due, trè, quattro e cinque Stromenti," of Giovanni Battista Vitali (printed at Bologna in 1677), afford a most remarkable parallel with the English compositions both in structure and style.

Now, in 1682, the year before the sonatas were brought out, a son was born to Purcell, who only lived a few months; he was named John Baptista, and a "friendly regard" for John Baptist Draghi, the organist to Catherine of Braganza, has been assigned as the reason of this choice of names. But putting aside the fact that Draghi's name was so completely Anglicised that he was commonly called "Mr. Baptist," while the name bestowed on Purcell's child preserves at least the Italian termination, there is no proof whatever of any friendship between the composers, still less of such a degree of intimacy as would account for the child being christened after Draghi; and I like to think that in choosing these names, which however common in Italy are rare in England, Purcell was guided by his admiration for Vitali, the composer whose works he must have been deeply studying for some little time past. It is merely a fancy, but in the absence of any direct proof to the contrary, I may be allowed to indulge it.

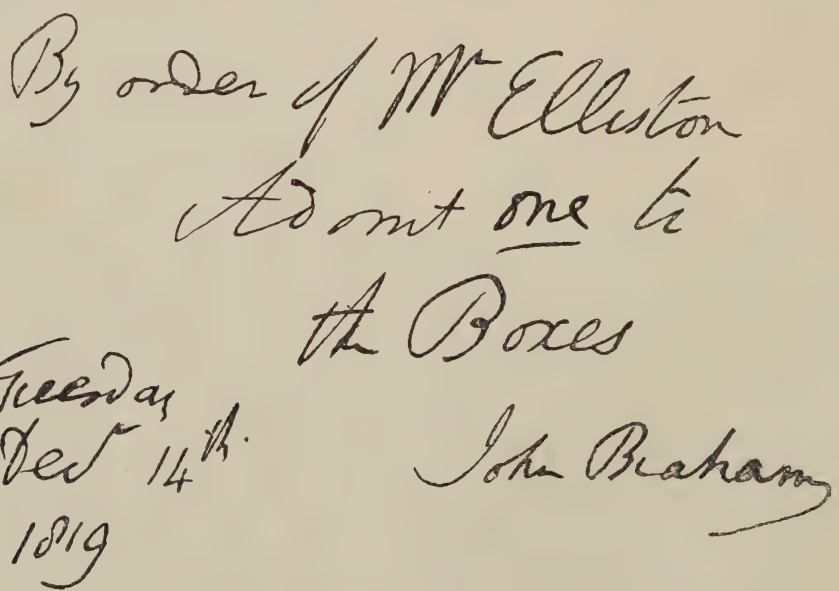
FROM MY STUDY.

For the present, at any rate, the series of portraits which have appeared under the above heading comes to an end. This statement, however, must not be taken as binding me to refrain from making an occasional addition, if such a step should appear desirable. From portraits I turn to autographs, which are interesting to most people, and, to many, even fascinating. From a considerable store of such things I purpose taking letters and signatures of musicians whose distinction gives importance to their relics; the process beginning at once with a letter of Berlioz and a theatre order signed by John Braham.



The letter was written under circumstances very creditable to the London professors and others whose conduct inspired it. Students of the French master's life will remember that he was engaged, in 1852, to conduct the concerts of the New Philharmonic Society in Exeter Hall; also that he was not engaged for the season of 1853, the reason being, to quote his own words, that "one of my chefs d'orchestre had contrived to secure that I should be dropped. . . . He wished to engage old Spohr; I could not, however, in order to please that gentleman, conduct in defiance of good sense—that is to say, as he conducts himself." A nasty one, this, for the colleague in question, whose identity is not difficult to determine. Berlioz, though rejected by the New Philharmonic, still had English friends, and, through their influence, his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," was brought out at Covent Garden in 1853. The venture failed, partly through an Italian cabal, at the head of which Berlioz was not indisposed to recognise Costa, unjustly perhaps, for a defeated man is not particular how he explains his defeat. Under these circumstances the master's friends resolved to offer him consolation of a practical kind. A committee was formed for the purpose of arranging a benefit concert, ready offers of assistance came from artists of all grades, and everything seemed to promise a good result, when important Continental offers compelled Berlioz to leave England. With these explanations, the letter now produced in fac-simile becomes perfectly clear:—

Du Comité dont vous avez fait partie, de la généreuse et charmante idée qu'il a eue de publier une édition anglaise de mon Faust. Il est impossible d'être plus délicatement bon et plus artiste en même temps. Votre bien dévoué H. Berlioz. Londres 8 Juillet 1853

It may be added that a proposal was made to bring out an English edition of "Faust" with money subscribed for the Concert, but I cannot discover that the matter ever got beyond this initial stage. Before leaving England Berlioz wrote a graceful letter to Mr. Smythson, chorus-master of Covent Garden, in reference to the same subject. He said: "The concert for which Mesdames and Messieurs the Artists of the Chorus of Covent Garden had so generously accorded me their aid cannot take place. I am none the less profoundly touched by the mark of sympathy which the artists have given me on this occasion. Will you thank them for me, and assure them that I am more happy and more proud of that proof of friendship on their part than though I had given the most splendid concert under ordinary conditions." How satisfied Mesdames and Messieurs the Artists of the Chorus must have been with these words!

It is pleasant to find some theatrical "orders" dated many years ago well preserved. I have a small collection which once belonged to the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, the autograph of most interest to musicians being that now reproduced below. Next month I will give a fac-simile of a ticket for one of Haydn's Concerts in London, signed by the good old master.

From remarks which have appeared in print, and from letters received, I gather that very little is generally known concerning "The Village Coquettes," the opera by Charles Dickens and John Hullah to which reference was made last month in my notes on the late John Parry. This induces me now to follow on with particulars of the work and a few historical details therewith connected.

A bibliographical paragraph at the outset may explain why a lyric drama boasting such distinguished parentage is so unfamiliar. The libretto was written in 1835, and published as a pamphlet a few days before Christmas, 1836. This was just after the first performance, which took place on December 6. The title-page reads:

"The Village Coquettes: A Comic Opera. In Two Acts. By Charles Dickens. The Music by John Hullah. London: Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street, 1836."

Copies of this issue are now very rare and, when in the market at all, one cannot be obtained, if in fine state, under twelve or thirteen guineas. Their rarity is explained, perhaps, by the little importance attached to such things after they have served their immediate purpose, and by the fact that Dickens was not, at that time, the commanding figure he subsequently became. Not long after the author's death a second edition, called a "fac-simile reprint," was issued by the original publishers, but, says Mr. Richard Herne Shepherd, "its value is greatly impaired by gross inattention throughout to textual accuracy." I have never met with the reprint, which probably had a very limited sale. A third issue is included in "The Plays and Poems of Charles Dickens," edited by Mr. Shepherd and published (1885) by Allen and Co., uniform with the édition de luxe of the author's novels. As only 150 copies were printed, this edition added little to public opportunity of becoming acquainted with the work.

Hullah's music is unknown to me, and, whether good or bad, stands as inferior in interest to the "book." It does not appear to have been published as a whole, but seven of the songs were separately issued and may, no doubt, easily be unearthed by those who think the operation worth their while. Mr. Herne Shepherd, with whose value as a musical critic I am unacquainted, certainly thinks well of them, as being "simple, unaffected, and full of beautiful, expressive English music," while a journal of the period remarked that Hullah's style "never could be so deeply imbued with the spirit of Purcell and the great old English masters had not the bent of his own genius directed him to a course of study very different from the fashionable routine of the day."

There is reason to believe that "The Village Coquettes" was brought under the notice of Braham, then manager of the St. James's Theatre, by George Hogarth, father-in-law of the author. In one of Dickens's letters to Hullah are some remarks pointing to this inference. He writes: "Mr. Hogarth has just been here, with news which I think you will be glad to hear. He was with Braham yesterday, who was far more full of the opera than he was; speaking highly of my works and 'fame' (!), and expressing an earnest desire to be the first to introduce me to the public as a dramatic writer. He said that he intended opening at Michaelmas, and added (unasked) that it was his intention to produce the opera within one month of his first night." Addressing his musical colleague a few days after the first performance, he made another mention of Hogarth, tending to the conclusion that the journalist acted as intermediary. It appears from this letter that the libretto did not satisfy all the critics—for that matter, what libretto ever did? Dickens writes: "Have you seen the Examiner? It is rather depreciatory of the opera, but, like all inveterate critics against Braham, so well done that I cannot help laughing at it, for the life and soul of me. I have seen the Sunday Times, the Dispatch, and the Satirist, all of which blow their critic trumpets against unhappy me most lustily. Either I must have grievously awakened the ire of all the 'adaptors' and their friends, or the drama must be decidedly bad. I haven't made up my mind yet which of the two is the fact. I have not seen the John Bull, or any of the Sunday papers except the Spectator. If you have any of them, bring 'em with you on Tuesday." Then follows the reference to Hogarth, which shows clearly enough that in 1836 the bludgeon man was about—the man who hits viciously without explaining why, and generally from behind. "I am afraid that for 'dirty Cummins'' allusion to Hogarth, I shall be reduced to the necessity of being valorous the next time I meet him." "Dirty Cummins" had probably intimated, in the amiable manner of his class, that, but for the journalist father-in-law, the "Village Coquettes" would not have been produced. Mr. Herne Shepherd describes Cummins as a "foul-mouthed criticling in the Weekly Dispatch, who had had recourse to 'the blackguard's loaded bludgeon of personalities.'"

Dickens probably bore his critics in mind when, a few days after the first performance, he wrote a preface to the published libretto, beginning: "'Either the Honourable Gentleman is right, or he is not,' is a phrase in very common use within the walls of Parliament. This drama may have a plot, or it may not; and the songs may be poetry, or they may not; and the whole affair, from beginning to end, may be great nonsense, or it may not, just as the honourable gentleman or lady who reads it may happen to think. So, retaining his own private and particular opinion upon the subject (an opinion which he formed upwards of a year ago, when he wrote the piece), the Author leaves every such gentleman or lady to form his or hers, as he or she may think proper, without saying one word to influence or conciliate them." Spoken like a man, but Dickens "climbs down" somewhat in the last paragraph, where he says: "It is needless to add that the libretto of an opera must be, to a certain extent, a mere vehicle for the music, and that it is scarcely fair or reasonable to judge it by those strict rules of criticism which would be justly applicable to a five-act tragedy or a finished comedy."

After the foregoing long but, I hope, not uninteresting preamble, I turn to the work itself. The period is 1729; the scene, an English village, and the characters those marshalled below, with the artists who "created" them:—

Squire Norton	Mr. Braham.
The Hon. Sparkins Flam (his friend)	...Mr. Forester.
Old Benson (a small farmer)	Mr. Strickland.
Mr. Martin Stokes (a very small farmer, with a very large circle of particular friends)	... Mr. Harley.
George Edmunds (betrothed to Lucy) ...	Mr. Bennett.
Young Benson	Mr. J. Parry.
John Maddox (attached to Rose) ...	Mr. Gardner.
Lucy Benson	Miss Rainforth.
Rose (her cousin)	Miss J. Smith.

The first act opens in a rick-yard, where John Maddox and some labourers are unloading hay, singing a Round as they do so, after the fashion of (idyllic) sons of toil:—

Hail to the merry Autumn days, when yellow cornfields shine
Far brighter than the costly cup that holds the monarch's wine.

Martin Stokes enters and begins a "comic" dialogue with John Maddox. Martin is the "low comedian" of the piece, and, in fairness to Dickens, it must be said that the character was forced upon him by Braham. This appears from a passage in one of the author's letters to Hullah: "He (Braham) wants a low-comedy part introduced—without singing—thinking it will take with the audience; but he is desirous of explaining to me what he means and who he intends to play it." The "who" was, of course, Harley. The "funny" talk over, Rose enters with beer, and is warned by Martin not to "carry on" with Mr. Sparkins Flam, but accept his own addresses. At that instant Squire Norton and Mr. Flam enter. They have been shooting, and the Squire offers his "bag" to Farmer Benson, who, with Lucy, has also appeared on the scene. But the honest farmer refuses; he has had too many favours from the Hall lately, and begins to suspect their meaning. Squire Norton and his friend, on their part, do not refuse the farmer's beer or the opportunity of flirting with the girls. Here Lucy has a song:

Love is not a feeling to pass away,
Like the balmy breath of a summer day;
It is not—it cannot be—laid aside;
It is not a thing to forget or hide.
It clings to the heart, ah, woe is me!
As the ivy clings to the old oak tree.

The little gathering becomes convivial, and the funny man does a deal of talking till the Squire himself bursts into song of a rollicking sort:

That very wise head, old Æsop, said
The bow should be sometimes loose;
Keep it tight for ever, the string you sever:
Let's turn his old moral to use.
The world forget, and let us yet,
The glass our spirits buoying,
Revel to-night in those moments bright
Which make life worth enjoying.
The cares of the day, old moralists say,
Are quite enough to perplex one;
Then drive to-day's sorrow away till to-morrow,
And then put it off till the next one.
Chorus.—The cares of the day, &c.

Exeunt all, and the scene changes to an open spot near the village. George Edmunds enters, with a stick in his hand, and, after seeing in the fallen leaves around him an emblem of lost happiness, proceeds to sing about them:

Autumn leaves, autumn leaves, lie strewn around me here;
Autumn leaves, autumn leaves, how sad, how cold, how drear!
How like the hopes of childhood's day,
Thick clustering on the bough!
How like those hopes in their decay,—
How faded are they now!
Autumn leaves, autumn leaves, &c.

His song ended, George looks for Lucy, but it is Rose who meets him, with a message that Lucy cannot come. George suspects the Squire in all this, and when John Maddox enters again to upbraid Rose for receiving Mr. Flam's attentions the plot begins to grow warm. Rose is a bit of a flirt, and says so in song:

Some folks who have grown old and sour,
Say love does nothing but annoy.
The fact is, they have had their hour,
So envy what they can't enjoy.
I like the glance, I like the sigh,
That does of ardent passion tell!
If some folk were as young as I,
I'm sure they'd like it quite as well.

Flam, Edmunds, and Maddox soon become parties to a lively altercation, in which the London "gent" gets rather the worst of it. He has spirit enough left, however, to join in a duet with Rose, the two rustics having departed:

Flam.
'Tis true I'm caressed by the witty,
The envy of all the fine beaux,
The pet of the Court and the city,
But still I'm the lover of Rose.

Rose.
Country sweethearts, oh, how I despise!
And oh! how delighted I am
To think that I shine in the eyes
Of the elegant—sweet—Mr. Flam.

Both.
Then let us be happy together,
Content with the world as it goes,
An unchangeable couple for ever,
Mr. Flam and his beautiful Rose.

The next scene is laid in the farmer's kitchen, where Martin Stokes repeats to Benson the village gossip concerning his daughter and the Squire. The old man breaks away in a rage, eager to expose the calumny. Presently, Young Benson enters, and, after him, the Squire. Another explosion follows, the young man threatening dire vengeance for any wrong done to his sister, and so storming out of the presence. Left alone, Squire Norton resolves to lose no time in carrying off the girl, and laughs at the idea of honour in such a case. This reminds him of a legend which he proceeds to sing:

The child and the old man sat alone
In the quiet peaceful shade
Of the old green boughs, that had richly grown
In the deep, thick forest glade.

The child speaks:

Dear father, what can honour be
Of which I hear men rave? &c.

The father answers:

It is a name—a name, my child,
It lived in other days.

Lucy enters at the close of this ominous ditty, followed by Flam; the two men then doing their best to deceive the farmer's daughter and remove her scruples. In this they are so far successful that when the Squire sings:

In rich and lofty station shine,
Before his jealous eyes;
In golden splendour, lady mine,
This peasant youth despise.

she answers:

Oh, it would be revenge indeed,
With scorn his glance to meet.
I, I his humble pleading heed!
I'd spurn him from my feet.

The Squire now presses for a speedy elopement, urging that, in her new position, she will be her father's pride and boast. Old Benson, having entered unobserved, hears this, and tenant and

NOVELLO'S
FOR HARVEST.

1. Honour the Lord with thy substance.—J. STAINER.

Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase. So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine. The Lord by wisdom hath founded the earth; by understanding He established the heavens. By His knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew.

The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms: Israel shall dwell then alone in safety: the fountain of Jacob shall be upon a land of corn and wine; also his heaven shall drop down dew.

Happy art thou, O Israel, happy art thou! who is like unto thee, O people, happy art thou! saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, the sword of thy excellency! Hallelujah!

2. Thou, O God, art praised in Sion.—E. V. HALL.

Thou, O God, art praised in Sion: and unto Thee shall the vow be performed in Jerusalem. Thou that hearest the prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come.

Thou visitest the earth, and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. Thou preparest their corn, for so Thou providest for the earth.

Thou, O God, art praised in Sion: and unto Thee shall the vow be performed in Jerusalem.

Come, ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of Harvest-home;
All is safely gathered in,
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own Temple, come;
Raise the song of Harvest-home. Amen.

3. Thou visitest the earth.—J. BARNBY.

Thou visitest the earth and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. Thou waterest her furrows, Thou sendest rain into the little valleys thereof.

Thou makest it soft with the drops of rain, and blessest the increase of it. Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness, and Thy clouds drop fatness.

O Lord, Thou art my God; I will exalt Thee, I will praise Thy Name. Thou art my God, and I will praise Thee: Thou art my God, I will exalt Thee; for Thou hast done wonderful things; Thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth. O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is gracious: His mercy endureth for ever.

4. The eyes of all wait on Thee.—A. R. GAUL.

The eyes of all wait on Thee, O Lord, and Thou givest them their meat in due season. O ye children of men, bless ye the Lord: praise Him, and magnify Him for ever.

Thou visitest the earth and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. O let the earth bless the Lord: yea, let it praise Him, and magnify Him for ever. The valleys stand so thick with corn that they laugh and sing. O all ye works of the Lord, bless ye the Lord: praise Him, and magnify Him for ever. Bless Him, and praise Him for ever.

*Sower Divine! sow the good seed in me,
Seed for eternity, Sower Divine.
Sower Divine! stay not Thine hand, but sow:
Then shall the harvest grow, Sower Divine.
Sower Divine! Let not this field be dry;
Refresh it from on high, Sower Divine.
Water this heart of mine, Sower Divine.

* By kind permission of Messrs. Nisbet and Co.

5. Rejoice in the Lord.—B. TOURS.

Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, for the Word of the Lord is true: and all His works are faithful.

He watereth the hills from above: the earth is filled with the fruit of His works. He bringeth forth grass for the cattle, and green herb for the service of men.

Great is the Lord, and marvellous, worthy to be praised: there is no end of His greatness. Heaven and earth shall praise His Name for ever and ever: and declare His power and majesty. Amen.

6. Thou visitest the earth.—J. B. CALKIN.

Thou visitest the earth and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. The river of God is full of water: Thou preparest their corn, for so Thou providest for the earth.

Thou waterest her furrows, Thou sendest rain into the little valleys thereof: Thou makest it soft with the drops of rain, Thou blessest the increase thereof.

Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness, and Thy clouds drop fatness. They shall drop upon the dwellings of the wilderness, and the little hills shall rejoice on every side. The folds shall be full of sheep, the valleys shall stand so thick with corn, they shall laugh and sing.

7. Great is the Lord.—Bruce Steane.

Great is the Lord, and marvellous, and worthy to be praised: there is no end of His greatness. One generation shall praise Thy works unto another, and declare Thy power.

The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord: and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord.

Great is the Lord, and marvellous, and worthy to be praised: there is no end of His greatness. And let all flesh give thanks unto His holy Name for ever and ever. Amen.

8. Praise, my soul.—E. V. Hall.

From Hymns Ancient and Modern, 298 (by permission).

Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven,
To His feet thy tribute bring;
Ransomed, healed, restored, forgiven,
Evermore His praises sing;
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Praise the everlasting King.

Praise Him for His grace and favour
To our fathers in distress;
Praise Him still the same as ever,
Slow to chide, and swift to bless;
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Glorious in His faithfulness.

Father-like, He tends and spares us,
Well our feeble frame He knows;
In His hands He gently bears us,
Rescues us from all our foes;
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Widely yet His mercy flows.

Angels in the height, adore Him
Ye behold Him face to face;
Saints triumphant, bow before Him,
Gathered in from every race:
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Praise with us the God of grace.

9. Fear not, O Land.—J. Goss.

Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad, then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God.

Be glad then, O land, and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. The floors shall be full of wheat, and ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the Name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt so wondrously with you. Be glad, then, ye children, and rejoice in the Lord your God, for the Lord will do great things.

10. Ye shall dwell in the land.—J. Stainer.

Ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be My people, and I will be your God. I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the Garden of Eden.

(Sung at the same time as the above.)

Give thanks unto the Lord, His mercy endureth for ever.

Oh, blessed is that land of God
Where Saints abide for ever,
Where golden fields spread far and broad,
Where flows the crystal river.

The strains of all its holy throng
With ours to-day are blending;
Thrice blessed is that harvest song
Which never hath an ending. Amen.

---

11. Ye shall go out with joy.—J. Barnby.

Ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the fields shall clap their hands.

Lift up your eyes, and look upon the fields, for they are white already to harvest. For the harvest is ripe and the presses are filled.

O blessed are ye that sow beside all waters. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; for I am the Lord thy God.

---

12. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.—E. V. Hall.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy God, O Zion. For He hath made fast the bars of thy gates, and hath blessed thy children within thee.

He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the flour of wheat.

He hath not dealt so with any nation, neither have the heathen knowledge of His laws. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem, praise thy God, O Zion.

Praise God from Whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him, all creatures here below,
Praise Him above, ye heavenly host,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Amen.

---

13. My mouth shall speak the praise.—J. E. West.

My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy Name for ever and ever.

The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord, and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness.

My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy Name for ever and ever. Hallelujah. Amen.

14. I will give thanks.—J. Barnby.

I will give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will speak of all Thy marvellous works. I will be glad and rejoice in Thee; yea, my songs will I make of Thy Name, O Thou most Highest.

The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord; and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness.

Therefore unto Him we raise
Hymns of glory, songs of praise;
To the Father, and the Son,
And the Spirit, Three in One,
Honour, might, and glory be,
Now, and through eternity.

Great is our Lord, and great is His power; yea, and His wisdom is infinite. He preserveth all them that love Him, but scattereth abroad all the ungodly. Amen.

---

15. The Lord is loving unto every man.—G. M. Garrett.

The Lord is loving unto every man: and His mercy is over all His works.

All Thy works praise Thee, O God: and Thy saints give thanks unto Thee. They shew the glory of Thy kingdom, and talk of Thy power; that Thy power, Thy glory, and the mightiness of Thy kingdom might be known unto men. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom: and Thy law is the truth. The Lord is loving unto every man, and His mercy is over all His works. Amen.

---

16. Sing to the Lord.—J. Barnby.

Sing to the Lord with thanksgiving, sing to the Lord with harp. O let your songs be of Him, and praise Him; and let your talking be of all His wondrous works. Sing to the Lord with thanksgiving, sing to the Lord upon the harp, sing praise to our God; Who covereth the heaven with clouds, and prepareth rain for the earth. Sing praise to our God, Who maketh the grass to grow upon the mountains, and herb for the use of men. Sing to the Lord with thanksgiving, sing to the Lord with harp.

Father, blessing every seed-time,
And refreshing all the soil,
Ripening the gracious harvest
For which all Thy servants toil:
O Thou Source of every blessing
Showered daily from above,
Hearken to our lips confessing
Our thanksgiving for Thy love. Amen.

---

17. The Lord hath done great things.—H. Smart.

The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

18. Great and marvellous are Thy works.—J. F. Bridge.

Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of saints. Let us now fear the Lord our God.

He reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest. Let us now fear the Lord our God. He giveth us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. Let us now fear the Lord our God.

O thank the Lord of all lords: for His mercy endureth for ever. Who giveth food to all flesh: for His mercy endureth for ever. Amen.

19. O praise God in His holiness.—H. Blair.

O praise God in His holiness, praise Him in the firmament of His power. Praise Him in His noble acts, praise Him according to His excellent greatness. Praise Him in the sound of the trumpet, praise Him upon the lute and harp. Praise Him in the cymbals and dances, praise Him upon the strings and pipe. Praise Him upon the well-tuned cymbals, praise Him upon the loud cymbals. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.

20. Sing we merrily.—F. A. W. Docker.

Sing we merrily unto God our strength: make a cheerful noise unto the God of Jacob. Take the psalm, bring hither the tabret: the merry harp with the lute. Blow up the trumpet in the new moon: even in the time appointed, and upon our solemn feast-day.

Young men and maidens, old men and children, praise the Name of the Lord: for His Name only is excellent, and His praise above heaven and earth.

He shall exalt the horn of His people, all His saints shall praise Him: even the children of Israel, even the people that serveth Him. Hallelujah. Amen. Sing we merrily unto God our strength. Hallelujah.

21. O come, let us sing.—B. Tours.

O come, let us sing to the Lord: let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation. Let us come before His presence with thanksgiving, and shew ourselves glad in Him with psalms. O come, let us sing to the Lord: let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation. For the Lord is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

And now, on this our festal day,
Thy bounteous hand confessing,
Upon Thine Altar, Lord, we lay
The first-fruits of Thy blessing;
By Thee the souls of men are fed
With gifts of grace supernal,
Thou, Who dost give us earthly bread,
Give us the Bread Eternal.

Blessed be the Name of the Lord, from this time forth for evermore. O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is gracious, and His mercy endureth for ever.

22. Praise the Lord, O my soul.—H. Lahee.

Praise the Lord, O my soul: O Lord my God, Thou art become exceeding glorious; Thou art clothed with majesty and honour.

He watereth the hills from above: the earth is filled with the fruit of Thy works. He bringeth forth grass for the cattle, and green herb for the service of men; that He may bring food out of the earth, and oil to make him a cheerful countenance, and bread to strengthen man's heart. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

23. Sing praises to God.—H. W. Wareing.

Sing praises to God, O ye kingdoms of the earth, O sing praises to the Lord, for this God is our God for ever and ever.

Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields, for they are white already to harvest. Lift up your eyes: for behold, I say to you, the fields are white to harvest.

Sing praises unto God: rejoice, give thanks, and sing praises unto God our King: for the harvest is ripe, and the presses are filled. O sing praises evermore. The isles of the heathen shall worship Him. For our God hath not forsaken us, but hath had mercy upon us. Sing unto God, praise Him, and magnify His Name for ever. Hallelujah.

24. O praise the Lord of Heaven.—J. Goss.

O praise the Lord of Heaven: praise Him in the height. Praise Him, all ye angels of His; praise Him, all His host. Praise Him, sun and moon; praise Him, all ye stars and light. Praise Him, all ye heavens, and ye waters that are above the heavens. Let them praise the Name of the Lord, for He spake the word, and they were made; He commanded, and they were created. He hath made them fast for ever and ever: He hath given them a law which shall not be broken. Praise the Lord upon earth, ye dragons, and all deeps; fire and hail, snow and vapours, wind and storm fulfilling His word; mountains and all hills, fruitful trees and all cedars; beasts and all cattle, worms and feathered fowls; kings of the earth and all people, princes, and all judges of the world; young men and maidens, old men and children, praise the Name of the Lord; for His Name only is excellent, and His praise above heaven and earth.

25. I will open rivers in high places.—E. Pettman.

I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness pools of water, and the dry land streams of water. Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. For the pastures of the wilderness do spring, and the fig-tree beareth her fruit. Be glad, ye children of Zion: rejoice in the Name of the Lord your God. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and ye shall praise the Name of the Lord your God.

Fear not, O Land, be glad and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. Then rejoice in the Name of the Lord.

26. O taste and see.—J. Goss.

O taste, and see, how gracious the Lord is: blessed is the man that trusteth in Him. O fear the Lord, ye that are His saints: for they that fear Him lack nothing. The lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they who seek the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good.

---

27. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.—W. Hayes.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy God, O Zion. For He hath made fast the bars of thy gates, and hath blessed thy children within thee.

He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the flower of wheat.

He hath not dealt so with any nation, neither have the heathen knowledge of His laws. Praise ye the Lord. Hallelujah. Amen.

28. Lo, Summer comes again.—J. Stainer.

Lo! summer comes again;
And after springtide rain,
The quick'ning sunbeams flood the world with light;
See, high in night's clear skies,
The joy of longing eyes,
The moon of harvest shines serenely bright.

O Lord of heaven and earth,
Who givest joy and mirth,
Open our lips to show Thy wondrous praise:
Our hearts are dull and cold,
We leave Thy love untold;
O give us strength our anthems glad to raise.

Each month we sow or reap,
Each hour we toil or sleep,
Thou givest life and joy, and Thou alone:
O grant to each and all,
When death's dark shadows fall,
To stand true workers round our Master's throne.

So life's long task-work o'er,
Set free for evermore,
We shall sit down at Thy great harvest feast;
Reaper and Sower met,
The burning heat forget,
And taste God's love, the greatest as the least.

Yea, Lord, Thou too dost claim
The sower's mystic name;
Thou sendest forth Thy reapers to the field;
O be it theirs to bear
The full corn in the ear,
When Thy true seed its hundred-fold shall yield.

Root out the evil tares,
Earth's vexing grief and cares,
Bind the hot blasts that wither and destroy;
And when the hour is come
To bring the full sheaves home,
Bid men and Angels share Thy harvest joy. Amen.

NOVELLO'S
FOR HARVEST.

29. Break forth into joy.—Oliver King.

Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem : for the Lord hath comforted His people. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field, for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion. Break forth into joy, ye waste places of Jerusalem.

The floors shall be full of wheat, and ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied. The folds shall be full of sheep, and ye shall eat and be satisfied, and praise the Name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt so wondrously with you. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem : for the Lord hath comforted His people. Break forth into joy, ye waste places of Jerusalem. Amen.

30. I will feed My flock.—J. F. Bridge.

I will feed My flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land ; they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid. Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they are My people, saith the Lord God.

31. God said, Behold, I have given you every herb.—G. A. Macfarren.

God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed ; to you it shall be for meat. While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease. Know therefore that the Lord thy God, He is God, the faithful God, Which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love Him and keep His commandments to a thousand generations.

He hath made His wonderful works to be remembered : the Lord is gracious and full of compassion. The works of His hands are verity and judgment ; all His commandments are sure. They stand fast for ever and ever, and are done in truth and uprightness. He hath made His wonderful works to be remembered.

Praise ye the Lord. I will praise the Lord with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

32. Praise ye the Lord.—G. M. Garrett.

Praise ye the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men.

The eyes of all wait on Thee, O Lord, and Thou givest them meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. Praise ye the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men.

33. All Thy works praise Thee.—J. Barnby.

All Thy works praise Thee, O Lord : and Thy saints give thanks unto Thee. They shew the glory of Thy kingdom, and talk of Thy power ; that Thy power, Thy glory, and mightiness of Thy kingdom might be known unto men. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and Thy dominion endureth throughout all ages.

The Lord is gracious and merciful ; long-suffering, and of great goodness. The Lord is loving unto every man, and His mercy is over all his works.

My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord : and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy Name for ever and ever. Amen.

34. O God, who is like unto Thee?—M. B. Foster.

O God, who is like unto Thee? There is not one that can do as Thou doest. Great things are they that Thou hast done.

The pastures are filled with flocks, the valleys are covered over with corn ; they shout for joy, they also sing. Thou visitest the earth, Thou makest it very plenteous. O God, who is like unto Thee? There is not one that can do as Thou doest. Great things are they that Thou hast done.

Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness.

Whoso is wise will ponder these things, and they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise His holy Name. Praise thou the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits. Who saveth thy life from destruction, and crowneth thee with mercy and lovingkindness : who satisfieth thy mouth with good things. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise His holy Name. Praise the Lord. Praise thou the Lord, O my soul!

35. The eyes of all wait upon Thee.—T. Adams.

The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord: and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord: and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy Name for ever and ever.

---

36. Lord of the harvest.—J. Barnby.

Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail;
Thine ancient promise doth not fail;
The varying seasons haste their round,
With goodness all our years are crown'd:
Our thanks we pay, this holy day;
O let our hearts in tune be found.
If Spring doth wake the song of mirth;
If Summer warms the fruitful earth;
When Winter sweeps the naked plain,
Or Autumn yields its ripened grain;
Lord of the Harvest, Thee we hail;
Thine ancient promise doth not fail;
Our thanks we pay, this holy day,
O let our hearts in tune be found.

But chiefly when Thy liberal Hand,
Bestows new plenty o'er the land,
When sounds of music fill the air,
As homeward all their treasures bear;
We too will raise our hymn of praise,
For we Thy common bounties share.

Lord of the harvest, all is Thine;
The rains that fall, the suns that shine,
The seed once hidden in the ground,
The skill that makes our fruits abound;
New every year Thy gifts appear;
New praises from our lips shall sound:
Immortal honour, endless fame
Attend the Almighty Father's Name;
Like honour to the Incarnate Son,
Who, for lost man, redemption won;
And equal praise we thankful raise
To Thee, Blest Spirit, with Them One. Amen.

37. The eyes of all.—G. J. Elvey.

The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord, and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness.

He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the flour of wheat.

I will magnify Thee, O Lord, and will praise Thy Name for ever and ever. Hallelujah. Amen.

38. Thou visitest the earth.—W. H. Callcott.

Thou visitest the earth, and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness, and Thy clouds drop fatness. The valleys stand so thick with corn, that they laugh and sing.

39. All Thy works shall praise Thee.—G. H. Ely.

All Thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord: and Thy saints give thanks unto Thee. They shew the glory of Thy kingdom, and talk of Thy power; that Thy power, Thy glory, and mightiness of Thy kingdom may be known unto men. All Thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord: Thy saints give thanks unto Thee.

O Lord, how manifold are Thy works: in wisdom hast Thou made them all; the earth is full of Thy riches. He watereth the hills from above, the earth is filled with the fruit of Thy works.

He bringeth forth the grass for the cattle, and green herb for the service of man. O Lord, how manifold are Thy works: in wisdom hast Thou made them all, the earth is full of Thy riches. All Thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord, Thy saints give thanks unto Thee. They shew the glory of Thy kingdom, and talk of Thy power.

To Thee, O Lord, our hearts we raise
In hymns of adoration,
To Thee bring sacrifice of praise
With shouts of exultation;
Bright robes of gold the fields adorn,
The hills with joy are ringing,
The valleys stand so thick with corn
That even they are singing.
Alleluia. Amen.

40. While the earth remaineth.—B. Tours.

While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease. O be joyful in God, all ye lands: sing praises unto the honour of His Name, make His praise to be glorious.

The river of God is full of water: Thou preparest their corn, for so Thou providest the earth. Thou waterest her furrows, Thou sendest rain into the little valleys thereof: Thou makest it soft with the drops of rain, and blessest the increase of it.

Sing unto God, O ye kingdoms of the earth, O sing praises unto the Lord.

41. Sing we merrily.—E. V. Hall.

Sing we merrily unto God our strength: make a cheerful noise unto the God of Jacob. Take the psalm, bring hither the tabret: the merry harp with the lute. Blow up the trumpet in the new moon: even in the time appointed, and upon our solemn feast-day.

Praise, O praise our God and King;
Hymns of adoration sing;
For His mercies still endure
Ever faithful, ever sure.
Glory to our Bounteous King;
Glory let creation sing;
Glory to the Father, Son,
And blest Spirit, Three in One.
Hallelujah. Amen.

---

42. Thou visitest the earth.—M. Greene.

Thou visitest the earth and blessest it: Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness.

43. O praise God in His holiness.—J. Weldon.

O praise God in His holiness, praise Him in the firmament of His power. Praise Him in His noble acts, praise Him according to His excellent greatness. Praise Him in the sound of the trumpet, praise Him upon the lute and harp. Praise Him in the cymbals and dances, praise Him upon the strings and pipe. Praise Him upon the well-tuned cymbals, praise Him upon the loud cymbals. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.

---

44. Joy in Harvest.—Bruce Steane.

Almighty Father, God of Love!
The seasons roll at Thy command,
Oceans below and stars above
Proclaim the wonders of Thy hand.

Winter returns with snow and cold,
Spring yields the green and blossom's thorn,
Summer displays the realms of gold,
And Autumn stores the fruit and corn.

Over the earth's extensive space
Thy bounteous gifts are richly spread.

May all who reap, who glean, and store,
United praises sing to Thee;
Much Thou hast given, Thou wilt give more,
If fervent our devotions be.

They joy before Thee, according to the joy in harvest. They joy before Thee, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

God of harvest, God of power,
God of justice, mercy, grace,
Guardian of the passing hour,
Thou shed'st Thy blessing on our race.

Crops of plenty to the scythe,
To the spade and sickle yield,
They who till the soil now thrive;
Golden produce crown the field.

Grateful hearts and thankful minds
Make the hills and valleys ring;
Creatures all of varying minds,
Should praise God for everything.

Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.

45. Thou visitest the earth.—J. W. Elliott.

Thou visitest the earth and blessest it: Thou makest it very plenteous. The river of God is full of water: Thou preparest their corn, for so Thou providest for the earth. Thou waterest her furrows, Thou sendest rain into the valleys thereof: Thou makest it soft with the drops of rain and blessest the increase of it. Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness, and Thy clouds drop fatness. They shall drop upon the dwellings of the wilderness: the little hills shall rejoice on every side. The folds shall be full of sheep: the valleys shall stand so thick with corn, that they shall laugh and sing.

46. I will magnify Thee.—J. Goss.

I will magnify Thee, O God, my King, and I will praise Thy Name for ever and ever. Every day will I give thanks unto Thee, and praise Thy Name for ever and ever. The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord, and Thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest Thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness. I will magnify Thee, O God, my King, and I will praise Thy Name for ever and ever. Every day will I give thanks unto Thee, and praise Thy Name for ever and ever. Amen.

---

47. O worship the King.—E. V. Hall.

(From Hymns Ancient and Modern, 167.)

O worship the King All-glorious above;
O gratefully sing His power and His love;
Our Shield and Defender, the Ancient of days,
Pavilioned in splendour, and girded with praise.

O tell of His might, O sing of His grace,
Whose robe is the light, Whose canopy space;
His chariots of wrath the deep thunder clouds form,
And dark is His path on the wings of the storm.

Thy bountiful care what tongue can recite?
It breathes in the air, it shines in the light;
It streams from the hills, it descends to the plain,
And sweetly distils in the dew and the rain.

Frail children of dust, and feeble as frail,
In Thee do we trust, nor find Thee to fail.
Thy mercies how tender! how firm to the end!
Our Maker, Defender, Redeemer, and Friend.

O measureless Might, ineffable Love,
While Angels delight to hymn Thee above,
Thy ransomed creation, though feeble their lays,
With true adoration shall sing to Thy praise. Amen.

48. The earth is the Lord's.—T. T. Trimnell.

The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof: the world, and they that dwell therein. For He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation.

49. O taste and see.—A. Sullivan.

O taste, and see, how gracious the Lord is: blessed is the man that trusteth in Him. O fear the Lord, ye that are His saints: for they that fear Him lack nothing. The lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they who seek the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good. Come, ye children, and hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord.

50. Let us now fear the Lord.—J. E. West.

Let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season: He reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

O how plentiful is Thy goodness which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee, and that Thou hast prepared for them that put their trust in Thee, even before the sons of men!

Let us now fear the Lord. He hath given meat unto them that fear Him: He shall ever be mindful of His covenant.

Therefore unto Him we raise
Hymns of glory, songs of praise;
To the Father, and the Son,
And the Spirit, Three in One,
Honour, might, and glory be
Now, and through eternity. Amen.

---

51. Praise, O praise our God and King.—E. V. Hall.

(From Hymns Ancient and Modern, 381.)

Praise, O praise our God and King;
Hymns of adoration sing;
For His mercies still endure,
Ever faithful, ever sure.

Praise Him that He made the sun
Day by day his course to run;
And the silver moon by night,
Shining with her gentle light.
Praise, O praise our God and King;
Hymns of adoration sing.

Praise Him that He gave the rain
To mature the swelling grain;
And hath bid the fruitful field
Crops of precious increase yield.
Praise, O praise our God and King;
Hymns of adoration sing.

Praise Him for our harvest store,
He hath filled the garner-floor;
And for richer Food than this,
Pledge of everlasting bliss.

Glory to our Bounteous King;
Glory let Creation sing;
Glory to the Father, Son,
And Blest Spirit, Three in One.
Hallelujah. Amen.

52. O Lord, how manifold.—J. Barnby.

O Lord, how manifold are Thy works: in wisdom hast Thou made them all; the earth is full of Thy riches. The valleys stand so thick with corn, that they laugh and sing. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits.

53. Fear not, O Land.—C. H. Lloyd.

Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad, then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God.

54. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.—W. H. Bliss.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy God, O Zion. For He hath made fast the bars of thy gates, and hath blessed thy children within thee.

He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the flour of wheat.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy God, O Zion.

55. Blessed be the Name of the Lord.—H. Gadsby.

Blessed be the Name of the Lord, from this time forth for evermore. Who is like unto the Lord our God, that hath His dwelling so high, and yet humbleth Himself to behold the things that are in heaven and earth? He watereth the hills from above: the earth is filled with the fruit of Thy works. He bringeth forth grass for the cattle, and green herb for the service of men. Blessed be the Name of the Lord, from this time forth for evermore.

56. While the earth remaineth.—C. Lee Williams.

While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease. O be joyful in God, all ye lands: sing praises unto the honour of His Name, make His praise to be glorious.

The river of God is full of water, for so Thou providest for the earth. Thou waterest her furrows, Thou sendest rain into the little valleys thereof: Thou makest it soft with the drops of rain, and blessest the increase of it.

While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease. O be joyful in God, all ye lands: sing praises unto the honour of His Name, make His praise to be glorious.

57. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord.—W. A. C. Cruickshank.

I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness.

For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth things sown in it to spring forth, so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord. Hallelujah! Amen.
